

ner that reflects the highest credit on him, as a critic and a scholar. Without extensive erudition and a fine taste, he could not have produced this pamphlet. But he brings to the elucidation of his subject what is quite as necessary as scholarship—a right appreciation of the moral grandeur and the spiritual beauties of the Bible. It is the splendour of the theme that gives dignity to its literature, and life and beauty to its poetry. The author realizes this and makes his readers feel it too.”—Irish Presbyterian.

“Testimony of Nineveh to the Veracity of the Bible.”

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND THREE PENCE.

“An excellent addition to our ‘Christian Evidences’—popular in manner, graphic and well put in form. From the religious system, military usages, costumes, architecture, &c., of the Assyrians, Mr. Harvey deduces several telling arguments for the veracity of Scripture.”—Edinburgh Witness.

“In perfect sobriety we say that it has but seldom been our lot to read a pamphlet of so fascinating and instructive a character. We have in it the whole marrow of Layard’s three volumes, and especially those parts that have a more direct and immediate bearing on revelation; and all this, not in the form of a skeleton detail of facts, but garnished and embellished with the products of a fine glowing imagination, and of a chaste, elegant style.”—Halifax Witness.

“In arranging his facts, and analyzing the wonderful discoveries of the ancient capital, Mr. Harvey exhibits a familiar acquaintance with ancient history, a powerful and fervid imagination, and a discriminating judgment. The results of the whole investigation are brought to bear with all the force of irresistible logic on the verities of the Bible.”—Irish Presbyterian.
