

tion of the Temperance Act of 1866, generally known as the Dunkin Act. The law relating to liquor-selling in them has, however, exactly the same effect as in the other prohibition municipalities. The five are: Bloomfield, Colchester, Hallowell, Pelham, Sarawak.

Besides the 199 municipalities which have thus made themselves free from any possibility of the opening of legalized temptations unless existing by-laws should be repealed, there are 136 other municipalities in which no licenses are granted. This prohibition in these places is partly because the strength of temperance sentiment is so great that no one could obtain the number of signatures necessary to a petition for a new license. In others the licensing authorities have decided that no licenses are necessary. The total list of these municipalities is as follows:
