SIR WILFRID AND OTHERS

Speaking at Fort William concerning Canada's place in the empire, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

"We glory in our parliament, our own laws, our constitution, our own navy, our own navy, call it a 'tin pot navy' if you will. But if the time ever comes, and may God forbid it, that the old home is in danger, our hearts and brains will be ranged at her side against any enemy, no matter whence that foe may hail."

This statement is sufficiently strong to prevent any misunderstanding. It is in line with former statements made by the premier, though we find Conservative newspapers asserting that the action of parliament in regard to the Canadian navy proves that Sir Wilfrid does not propose to range the navy on the side of England in the hour of danger. However, the government is not afraid to submit its naval policy to the people of Canada. Sir Wilfrid said at Fort William that the federal elections would not be brought on this year, and one of the reasons was that they did not want the naval policy obscured. They wanted it discussed and clearly presented to the people of Canada. It is worthy of note in this connection that the Legion Standard, a stalwart Conservative journal, does not adversely criticize the Canadian naval policy. It says the Canadian navy has the great advantage of being what we may hope may be an enduring and glorious record, at a time when the science of warfare has been brought to a perfection unknown since the Napoleonic wars. The Standard quotes a resolution adopted by the Canadian parliament in March, 1909, to the effect that whenever the need arises the Canadian people will be found ready and willing to make any sacrifice that is required to give the imperial authorities the most loyal and hearty co-operation in every movement for the maintenance of the integrity and honor of the empire, and it makes this comment:

"There could be no more explicit declaration of the relation of Canada to the Empire and of her sentiment towards that relation."

The Standard further points out that Canada recognizes that the extension of sea-borne commerce involves its armed protection, and says it is in the power of the United Empire to hold the highways of the world against all comers.

The attitude of the Conservative party on the naval question is one of the reasons why that party cannot possess the confidence of the people of Canada. One section of the party is utterly opposed to a navy, and the other is so divided in its views that the people turn with relief to a party which knows its own mind, and which has a definite policy, satisfactory alike from the national and imperial standpoint.

THE GLOOMY GLOBE

Conservative papers are quoting with great satisfaction an editorial from the St. John Globe which concludes as follows:

"To the ordinary reader it must appear strange that at this moment while there are apparently feints at getting a harbor in St. John by the digging of mysterious holes in the bed of Courtney Bay, the Grand Trunk Railway Company is vigorously at work securing and enlarging its railway lines and their adjuncts in New England in order to do the business at those ports which we are assuming will be done here."

It is not surprising that the Globe should print a statement of this kind. It has always been pessimistic so far as the affairs of St. John are concerned. Its views are always gloomy views. It can see no ray of light. It is not impressed by the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific has secured a site for its terminals at St. John, nor by the statement made by President Hays concerning the business to be done by the company at this port. Fortunately the citizens of St. John have ceased to be influenced by the Globe. They have seen those developments take place which the Globe said would not occur. The years have proved the Globe to be a false prophet. Moreover, it does not admire the minister of public works, and would not permit itself to confess that a work of development with which he is in any way allied, could possibly result in advancing the constituency which he represents in parliament.

TRADE RELATIONS

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune does not agree with those Conservatives who contend that Canada got the worst of the recent tariff agreement between Canada and the United States. He says:

"The agreement, while announced to be entirely satisfactory to this country, as a matter of fact is proving costly to the United States. The benefits it confers are enjoyed to a greater degree by Canada than by the people on this side of the line."

This correspondent goes further, and asserts that President Taft is very much in earnest in his desire to establish still more friendly relations with Canada. It is suggested that the president may ask congress to amend the tariff in such a way as would tend to increase the trade between the two countries. This, of course, will require time, but so far as Canada is concerned, the situation is well stated by the Ottawa Free Press as follows:

"Canada can afford to wait and wait with equanimity. The existing relations are working out satisfactorily as far as we are concerned. It is the move of the United States."

TRADE WITH CUBA

In the monthly report of the trade and commerce department for the month of March, Commissioner Kirkpatrick deals extensively with the question of Canadian trade with Cuba. He tells of the remarkable development of the potato trade. He points out also that when proper cold storage facilities are provided there will be an excellent market in Cuba for dairy products, eggs and fruits. He declares that the manner in which apples have been shipped from Canada to Cuba in the past has not been such as to develop trade. Mr. Kirkpatrick points out that Canada should make an effort to secure a portion of the summer travel from Cuba which now goes to the United States. He directs attention to the fact that the trade between Canada and Cuba need not be limited to the winter season, but may be continuous throughout the year. An important fact for exporters to remember is that 85 per cent. of Cuban trade is handled through brokers, and that Canadian exporters should endeavor to secure the services of those who are most reliable. He expresses the view that it would be a waste of time to try to do business in any other way than through brokers. This is another case where it is necessary for exporters to adapt themselves to the customs of the importing country. There seems to be a fine field in Cuba for the development of trade, and the province of New Brunswick is in a position to secure a large share.

Hon. Sydney Fisher, interviewed in Montreal on his return from England last week said: "I was very glad to see that Canada is looming large in the Old Country. The people are getting authentic information now about the dominion, and the capitalists have great confidence in our enterprise and industries."

In an article on Dominion Day the London Daily Mail tells of the wonderful development of Canada and says: "As Canada has grown in wealth and population her influence also has grown both at home and abroad. No stronger proof of this could be given than the attitude of foreign nations toward Canada. There are no more pilgrimages to Washington, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier said some years ago. The dominion is no longer a suppliant for favors; she goes abroad as ambassador with full powers."

Prof. James W. Robertson, who is described by the London Daily Mail as "One of the leaders of the world's thought, today," was interviewed in Ottawa a few days ago, in regard to the work of the royal commission on industrial training and technical education, of which he is the chairman. Dr. Robertson expressed a desire that the people of the rural districts of the country should understand that the work of this commission is for them as well as for those in manufacturing districts. He points out that education is of just as much importance to them as to the people of the cities. He dwells especially upon the importance of the rural school and school garden. "The eyes of England," Dr. Robertson says, "are turned upon Canada, and taking note of what is being done in this country." While he was there recently, he delivered a number of addresses, and in all of them laid emphasis upon the work that the Dominion and Provincial Governments have been doing to improve rural conditions, and to carry on educational work among the people. As an illustration of the interest that is taken by the English people in Canada, Dr. Robertson says that he was chatting one day with a member of the staff of the London Times about Canada, without any idea that it was more than a passing conversation, but next day the Times contained an editorial founded on Canada and its progress.

Young Swanton, of 200 Waterloo street, while working on his own house, fell from a ladder which was suspended on hooks from the top of the house. He was picked up in a dazed condition and Dr. Berryman, who was summoned, ordered his removal to the general Public Hospital, where it was found that his left leg was broken in three places above the knee.

It was announced in the cathedral yesterday that the Bishop's picnic will be held at Fort York on August 2.

FAREWARD

(Clinton Scollard in "Pro Patria.")

We have known war and its enanguished sighs.

Pain's palled harvest, Death's divine release;

Hushed are the guns; sheathed is the sword that smites!

Let us give thanks for peace!

We have known Want—the lean wolf—at the door;

Aye, we have known him at the hearth intrude;

Let us give thanks from shore to utmost shore

That there is Plenty!

We have known Sorrow—happily know it still;

Let us give reverent thanks that there is One

Whose strength unflinching and whose loving will

We all may lean upon.

FOR AN ALBUM

(John Greenleaf Whittier.)

I have before me an album for which Whittier wrote upon its first page these dedicatory lines fifty-seven years ago. They were written for a young lady, a neighbor and distant relative of the poet, and they have never appeared in print—S. T. Dickard.

Like a virgin heart, unwritten By the pen of passion, I have before me an album for which Whittier wrote upon its first page these dedicatory lines fifty-seven years ago. They were written for a young lady, a neighbor and distant relative of the poet, and they have never appeared in print—S. T. Dickard.

Human love, I give thee warning. In the shadow of the Morning On the meadow, on the water, Ever growing short and shorter, Narrowing in the sun, and gone Ere the weary noon comes on.

Seek it while it may be found, While the dew of morning yet, Ere the night of death shall fall, And the darkness cover all!

Love of God is more than these— Shade of Eden's holy trees— Palms that storm has never tossed, Sacred shelter never lost.

In thy duty's little round, Seek it while it may be found, While the path of life is wet, With the dew of morning yet, Ere the night of death shall fall, And the darkness cover all!

VERY MUCH SURPRISED.

"You look surprised, Mrs. Mangle; what's the matter?" "Why, my son, Tom, came in just now telling me that he had seen, He told me some news of the fights in the air that were absolutely incredible, and so surprised me as to leave me almost in a state of perturbation."—Baltimore American.

A fool there was, and he went away— Even as you and I. His head for a holiday— But the fool was a fool, and he went away— Even as you and I.

Oh, the wits we've lacked and the grips we've packed In the summer time and fall. And the times when having had our fling We've come home gravely wondering Just why we went at all.

A fool there was, and his savings spent— Even as you and I. The roof of a Pullman for his tent, And lived the life of an emigrant— But a fool will follow his natural bent— Even as you and I.

Oh, the fools we meet, and the dust we eat, And the tendency to roam; The hardships that we all adore— And the rest that we are looking for Awaiting us at home. —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Stole to Buy Bread

(Toronto Telegram.)

A weeping wife and three little tots of children looked pleadingly up in the face of the magistrate on behalf of the husband and father, Alfred Cooper, at the bar charged with theft.

Cooper pleaded guilty to stealing a quantity of shoe laces, rubber heels and other shoe goods from F. B. Bond, appearing for defendant. "His wife says the goods he stole were to buy bread for the children. He has a wife and three children to keep on $7 a week, and there is no food or money in the house."

"I'm very sorry," the magistrate commented.

"But for the sake of the babies," pleaded the weeping wife, "don't be too hard."

Away in the rear benches many men blew their noses loudly—a mere bluff to hide their moistening eyes.

The magistrate for some reason did not like to look up, but felt it was his duty to be just and the sentence was thirty days in jail.

"There are many here who have heard your case and will likely help you," said the bench in conclusion.

And the sad quartette were led away.

Better Class of Immigrants

(Montreal Star.)

Colonel Davidson, president of the Canadian Northern Land Company, was one of the passengers on board the Royal Edward, which arrived at Montreal Friday evening. He has been in England for the past four months on the company's business. Speaking on the subject to a representative of the Star, regarding the new line, he said:

"The passenger and freight returns have justified the Royal Line, and it is noteworthy that while we have done so much business none of the other lines have suffered. In fact, there seems to have been an all around progress. That shows there is enough trade for us all, and we are all helping in the development of the country. Our company has organized a good emigration department in England, and it can give testimony to the generally improved class of settlers that is now coming to Canada. Many of these are men with a certain amount of capital who are coming with a determination to settle here permanently, and others are manifestly workers and not shirkers. I look for a large increase in the number of emigrants next year, and I think the Canadian Northern will be in shape to bring its fair share of them. Mr. Scott Griffin has gone over to London to manage that end of the line."
