THE QUEBEC MARRIAGE LAWS ARE MISUNDERSTOOD

Ottawa, May 28.—What is considered to be the crucial point in the argument of the learned counsel opposing the right of the Dominion Parliament to enact the Lacasse marriage bill was reached in the Supreme Court this afternoon when P. H. Mignault, K. C., of Montreal, asserted that the general public misunderstood, and any legal light seemingly deliberately misconstrued the marriage law of the Province of Quebec.

The Forbidden Topic

By RUTH CAMERON

"AND how do you do, this morning?" I saluted a casual acquaintance of mine. I meant the question merely as a form of greeting, but the lady took it in its literal sense, and proceeded to fully enlighten me. "Well, my indignation is a little better this morning," she decided, "but my rheumatism is worse. It kept me awake from four o'clock on. I've been taking some new pills for it but I had to give them up because they upset my stomach and—"

In the last five years there has been an influx of a new kind of article into our magazines—the health article. We are told everything imaginable about our bodies and the care of them, how to avoid this disease, what the first symptoms of that abnormal condition are, etc., etc. In many ways I think these articles are a splendid thing, but I sometimes wonder if the subject is not on the verge of being overdone. It is not possible to concentrate proper attention upon the body and the life to which it is heir, to an unhealthy degree. It is well to know enough about the body to be able to live normally and to recognize danger signals when something is wrong, but it is not possible to know and think too much about our hearts and our stomachs, our digestion and our nerves.

There is such a thing as knowing too little about the body, its care and its needs. To understand the functions of the body enough to try to live rightly, and beyond that to think and talk as little as possible about the whole matter—this, I think, is a golden mean between these two extremes.

A View of Deschanel as Possible President of France—A Man With a Home in Many Lands

An event that has just taken place in France may possibly have far reaching consequences as far as international affairs are concerned, and that in the not very distant future, adds to the election of M. Paul Eugène Louis Deschanel to the presidency of the French Chamber of Deputies, thus making him the most conspicuous candidate for the presidency of the republic in succession to President Fallières.

There is no disputing the fact that M. Deschanel is a man of undoubted talents. He is a member of the academy, a famous orator and an impressive writer on political and social questions. But he is regarded by many as an "unusual" man for the position of president, for the reasons that he has too limited a sense of the responsibility of any office he may hold, makes too strong an assertion of his own individuality, that he is too impetuous and also regardless of the consequences of what he says.

As I mentioned in these letters the other day, he gave great offence in Vienna some years ago, by declaring in his speech of inauguration and election at the French Academy that "emperor Francis Joseph's death would be France's opportunity, since it would bring about the danger of an insurrectionary movement in the Austrian Empire." For an ordinary French orator or writer to make such a declaration would be to invite disaster, but a high official—like was president of the chamber of deputies at the time—to speak so glibly about the destruction of a friendly nation and the demise of its beloved ruler, was unprecedented.

And yet M. Deschanel was so little able to appreciate the significance of his utterances that he actually applied for the position of ambassador at Vienna, from which capital, of course, a prompt notification was received that he would be persona non grata.

Presidents of republics—like emperors and kings—are as a rule keenly alive to the danger of insurrectionary movements in a foreign country, and submit every word to their cabinet before uttering it. What would therefore happen if the French were elected as their chief magistrate a man who, while gifted with a copious vocabulary of incisive language, should have the habit of heedless and unfettered outspokenness, and of saying the wrong thing, at the time when it would do the most harm, is too unpleasant to contemplate.

Besides all this, he is scarcely what one would call a "practical" man, but a simplicity of character. He is too much of a dandy in his dress; so artificial and inordinately correct as to be almost repulsive to the charge of foppishness and affectation. At one time he was a suitor for the hand of the sister of M. Humbert.

The dignity of president of the chamber carries with it many advantages, namely, the permission of living at the Tuileries, a salary of 100,000 francs a year—which in France means $100,000—and a course more of privileges and advantages well worth looking-forward to.

Truly a Man of the World An American who was so cosmopolitan in his tastes that he had residences in New York, Montreal and Paris, and who had relatives and connections by marriage in the United States, Canada, England, France, Holland, Germany, and far off Australia, is, I think, well worthy of passing mention.

Daily Hints For the Cook

MARLBOROUGH PIE

Six macaroons, roll fine; cup stewed apples, three eggs, half pint cream, teaspoon chopped citron; mix. Line deep pan with crust, pour in the mixture; bake.

APPLE FRITTERS

Pare good sized apples; remove the core with an apple corer, cut each apple in halves cross-wise, making four rings of one apple, dip each ring of apple into a batter from one egg, one cup of sweet milk, one teaspoon of baking powder, sufficient flour, and a little salt; fry in deep fat. Serve with any sauce preferred or roll in powdered sugar.

BAKING POWDER BISCUIT

Mix and sift two cups of flour, two teaspoonsful of baking powder, and one tablespoonful each of butter and lard with the tips of the fingers; add gradually three-quarters of a cup liquid (milk and water, equal parts). Turn out on a floured board and pat and roll lightly to one-half inch in thickness; shape with a biscuit cutter, first dipping in flour. Place on a buttered and lard bakes in a hot oven from twelve to fifteen minutes.

LOWER COST OF LIVING

Spend less for your breakfast—eat more Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes. There are twenty big packets to the package—and the package cost only 25 cents.
