As soon as word is received from Washington, Marshal Bennett and Agent Schenck will join the troops, invade the Indian camps and endeavor to put the leaders under arrest.

The Creeks threaten that after they have cleaned out all the whites in the interior they will visit the various towns in the Creek Nation, destroy them by fire and threaten to kill Chief Porter and any of the members of the Dawes commission...

Chief Porter is now in Washington and has been several the condition of affairs. Lepaltah Mekko, the insurrectionary chief of the Snake bands, has submitted the following ultimatum to President McKinley:

"Hickory Town, Creek Capital. To President McKinley, Washington, D. C. I have already informed you of the matter concerning the execution of the Creeks laws. I am now executing my laws as I told you I would."

"LAPTAH MEKKO. The Creek jurisdiction has been transferred to the United States courts for several years and the Snake chief's notification to the president that he will execute the old Creek laws is considered as a message of defiance.

Indiana is a half-breed. He has just returned from Washington and claims to carry with him the authority of the president and consent to run the Dawes commission and all white people out of the territory. Victoria's Coronation and Her Marriage. After the King's death, Victoria met her council at Kensington Palace. "Never was anything," wrote the clerk of the council, "like the impression she produced on the chorus of praise and admiration which was raised about her manner, and certainly not without justice. It was very extraordinary, and something far beyond what was looked for."

On the day of her coronation the Queen had some trouble in keeping the crown upon her head. Every salutation she made threatened to displace the imperial diadem, and her efforts to retain it in the right place were impeded by the ecstasy and sob, which she carried in her right and left hands respectively.

Upon reaching Hyde Park corner, on the return journey, the girl Queen, overcome by the excitement and fatigue of the day, let the sceptre fall from her hand and burst into a flood of tears.

It was soon obvious that the youthful Queen had a will of her own, and meant to exercise it as far as she could. Many another young girl would have been willing to do exactly as she was told by her council without argument, but Victoria questioned.

Once, when her prime minister urged expediency in signing a document, she stopped him and exclaimed, "I have been taught, my lord, to judge what is right and wrong; but expediency is a word which I neither wish to hear nor understand." No wonder, after this, that Lord Melbourne laughingly remarked that he would rather have 10 Kings to manage than one Queen.

Prince Albert, it is said, had been in love with his cousin for at least a couple of years before she proposed to him. Joseph even affirm that the marriage had been suggested when he was a mere child of ten, and that the common nursery talk at that time was about his little bride in England, "the sweet Mayflower."

Anyhow, the Queen gave her heart, and her whole heart, to her handsome cousin of Saxe-Coburg. She always regarded the Prince's marriage with her in the light of a sacrifice, and often spoke of it in that way. After her betrothal she wrote to her uncle, Leopold, the then King of the Belgians: "I love him (Prince Albert) more than I can say, and shall do everything in my power to render this sacrifice--for such in my opinion it is--as small as I can."

The then Archbishop of Canterbury suggested to the Queen that perhaps she might like to have the words "to obey" in the marriage service altered, on the occasion of her own wedding. "No," was the decisive reply; "I wish to be married as a woman, not as a Queen."

When Prince Albert, as he placed the ring on his bride's finger, repeated the words: "With all my worldly goods I thee endow," the Queen, who could appreciate humor as well as dignity, found it impossible to repress an arch smile.

The deepening of the St. Lawrence canal system has had other results than to allow the passage of ocean-going freighters. Following in the wake of the vessels sets sea herrings have made their appearance in Lake Ontario and are being eagerly captured by the fishermen.

When does a man become a scoundrel? "When he horns and haws." "No." "When he threads his way." "No." "When he rips and tears." "No." "Give it up." "Never, if he can help it."--Boston Christian Register.

When a student in Girard college breaks a rule of that institution he is punished by being compelled to take a seat for 20 minutes on "a stool of repentance." When this punishment was inaugurated, years ago, only one stool was necessary. Now there are 64.

No time was lost by a Chicago wife after she had learned that her husband, from whom she was living apart, was about to sue for a divorce. She hunted up an old sweetie and agreed to marry him. Then she sent $50 to her husband with an urgent request to "hurry up that divorce."

The Roman emperors always signed their names in purple ink. No subject of the empire was permitted to use or even have this ink; and, on at least two occasions, the possession of a small quantity of it was considered treason and the person owning this emblem of royalty was put to death.

The early pens were so expensive that the steel penmakers advertised that they would make such repairs as were necessary to their pens for a stated time, generally about six months. When a man damaged his pen he carried it back to the factory and had it mended by an experienced mechanic.

Mrs. W. Boyd Steele of Stephen City, Va., had been missing flour and other things from her pantry. Her husband, who is an amateur photographer, so arranged a camera that if anyone disturbed the flour the photographic plate would be exposed and a snapshot of the thief taken. The Steele family then went calling and on their return found a very good picture of a neighbor in the act of stealing flour.

At the siege of the legations, when the Japanese minister called for volunteers to assist in the defence of his legation, no less than 25 officers of the Japanese army, who had been scattered about Peking in various capacities, responded to the call. One had been the foreigners' barber, another had been the leading photographer, etc., which perhaps accounts for the excellent information about things in China that Japan possesses.

In southern Italy one of the peculiar customs of the peasants is the wearing of price marks on new suits of clothes. Whereas in other countries the dealer's ticket and tag are removed the moment a suit is bought, in the sunny lee and heel of the European "boot" they are fastened on the tighter and worn until they fall off. The object of this, presumably, is to show neighbors that you have new clothes, bought on such a day and costing so much at $6 and $8.

A Danbury, Conn., fish dealer is much excited over a peculiar clam which he found in a shipment he received this morning. His attention was called to it by an incrustation on one side of the shell, resembling metal ore. He showed it to several friends and then took it to a jeweler who tested it with acid and announced that there were traces of gold in the formation on the shell.
