And within the city limits she alighted and began work in good earnest.

"Strawberries? who'll buy my wild strawberries?" rang out her clear, shrill voice, as she walked along—lightly balancing the weight on her arm, and enjoying the impromptu masquerade as only a spirited young woman can.

Mrs. Powler bought four quarts for preserving at twenty-five cents per quar.

"Wild berries have such a flavor," said the old lady, reflectively; "and "tant often you get 'em in the city. I s'pose you don't come round reg'lar, young woman?"
