The Oxfordian Lunch Bucket

by Alan McHughen

All right. I swore I'd never write another Lunch Bucket, but in a drunken stupor was coerced into changing my (feeble) mind. The editor of this paper, in his / her (delete as appropriate) infinite wisdom / stupidity (delete wisdom) decided that it would be nice to have at least one more Lunch Bucket.

1 notice only a few superficial changes in the cafeteria after my three month absence, such as increased prices. Things are ba-sically the same: Frank Portwhatziz (the Food Manager) still drools at the sound of the cash register bell; the servers still have difficulty picking out the grains of rice with legs and the cashiers can still charge four different people with the same meal four different prices.

But the most convincing was seeing the "Out of Order" sign on the dollar changer.

People tell me that the food is somewhat better this year. And I readily believe them. It certainly couldn't get any worse.

I found only three letters in my box to answer this week, may be because no one knows I'm back to write this thing. Anyway, I have a sneaky suspicion they were written by the same person, as the writing style is similar in each and, besides, they were all on the same piece of paper. Before going to them, I would like to announce that letters to me may be left in the suggestion box in the cafeteria. since Ms. Beal took over as What do you mean? I have no idea. No.

Not that I know of. Nothing. (I hope.) I trust this satisfies your curiosity.

Dear Lunch Bucket,

The beef stew is horrible. Saga puts too much spice and too many bouillon cubes in it.

Hot Mouth

Hot Mouth? Yes. Well. Look at it this way: if not for the spices and bouillon cubes, you would be consuming a bowl of usually not-even-hot water. You should be satisfied with what you're NOT getting.

Dear Lunch Bucket,

Why is milk sold only in those containers and not sold from the bulk machine?

Milk Drinker

I would assume that only bulk is sold from the bulk machines. I answered this question last year when the switch was made. Or don't you remember? (stupid). Well, for the benefit of those who were not here last year, let me explain. The milk in the bulk containers tends to go bad if not used. (logical?) And since the pressure of output drops off considerably as the supply depletes, people think it's empty when, in fact, it actually contains a few drops. These drops add up after awhile and the resulting cost in wastage is prohibitive. These are the official reasons. The real reason is that everyone would fill up their cup, drink it and fill it again. Thus getting value for their money. You can't expect Saga to put up with that, can you? Milk provided in the small cartons decimates this wastage problem, since most students (not all) don't have the jam to drain a container of milk, put it back and take another. Happy now?
