Notice is hereby given that all per- sons residing within the License Dis- trict of South Brant who propose to apply to the Board of License Com- missioners for Ontario, under The Liquor License Act for a Tavern, Shop or Club License to take effect within the said district on and after the 1st day of May 1916, are required to make application therefor to R. J. EACRETT, of BRANTFORD, Lic- ensing Inspector for the district, not later than the 15th day of July next.

Forms of applications for Tavern and Shop Licenses can be procured from the said Licensing Inspector, either by mail or on personal application therefor.

Public Notice of the time and place at which the meetings of the Com- missioners will be held will be given by advertisement at least two weeks previous to the date of such meeting, at which time the particulars required by the Act will also be published for the information of the public.

By Order of the Board.
CLARK E. LOCKE,
Secretary of the Board of License Commissioners.
Toronto.

Dated at Toronto this 18th day of June, 1915.

The unusual sight of a shepherd and his flock passing through the strand was witnessed the other night. Pedestrians stood in groups gazing at the sheep till they were lost in the dark- ness and nothing but the flicker of the shepherd's lantern was seen.

"SIR JOHN"

You who read with quickening pulse of the splendid temper of our army in the field, have you ever thought that its qualities of undaunted courage and never-failing optimism to have burned so brightly all through the weary months of the campaign, "must have been fed from some steady source? You know what the presence of "Corporal John" meant to Marlborough's heart from the signs of his devotion. You have heard how Wellington's soldiers declared that the sight of "old Art's" long nose in a fight was better than a reinforce- ment of 10,000 men; you have seen how the calm steadfastness of his face before the French army in its to a methodical, businesslike organiza- tion. In the same way the spirit of our army in France is the spirit of its leader, Sir John French.

It is not in the hour of victory that an army turns to its head for solace. It was when the fate of the combat hung in the balance at Malplaquet that Marlborough's troops derived fresh heart from the sight of their leader, turning to the charge at the head of the British and Hanoverian cavalry. It was in the dark days in Spain that Wellington's hard pressed legions took comfort from the presence of the im- petuous, the Englishman at their midst. This was how shown that Britons have lost nothing of the fighting qualities of their fathers. But there are times in war when, with disaster lowering, men in the stress of battle become so weary that it is that they lean on their leader. Then it is that the leader's character is tested.

Thus it was at Mons and after. Thus it was at Ypres. Those who lived with Sir John French through the dark days of the great retreat will tell you that he, almost alone of all men there, never lost heart. He maintained his brave confidence in God, in his men, and in himself throughout, and when he afterwards admitted, he was looking for a spot where the British expeditionary force could make its last stand. For the little army that Sir John French originally took out from England, never had a more successful one. So the field marshal had decided. Such is the spirit of the man.

Through sleepless nights, through days when one message of bad news succeeded another, when regiments were being cut up while the men were so dog tired that they staggered as they followed the long road towards Paris, Sir John remained calm and confident. No outward sign betrayed the anxiety that he must have de- voured him, burdened with the awful responsibility of the flower of Eng- land's army confided to his charge. He wore his field marshal's cap with the same jaunty rake as ever. He was scrupulous neat in his attire, as is his invariable wont. Whenever the accommodation allowed he would sit down to luncheon at the appointed hour as placidly as though he were at his London house. And the talk would be of pleasant English topics, club- gossip, home politics, the latest num- ber of Punch, etc., then luncheon over, back to the maps and the re- ports and the onward rush of war.

Sometimes the men were so dog tired that they staggered as they followed the long road towards Paris, Sir John remained calm and confident. No outward sign betrayed the anxiety that he must have de- voured him, burdened with the awful responsibility of the flower of Eng- land's army confided to his charge. He wore his field marshal's cap with the same jaunty rake as ever. He was scrupulous neat in his attire, as is his invariable wont. Whenever the accommodation allowed he would sit down to luncheon at the appointed hour as placidly as though he were at his London house. And the talk would be of pleasant English topics, club- gossip, home politics, the latest num- ber of Punch, etc., then luncheon over, back to the maps and the re- ports and the onward rush of war.

So the field marshal would break off work and announce that he was going for a walk. He would stroll away, a dapper, well gaited little figure, chat- ting with a companion about such things as the weather, the date of the fields, a good horse, a garden. But when he returned it was with his mind made up about some knotty point to solve which he had thus satisfied forth. "I will go to the end of the line," a general fetched hot foot from here, a mes- sage sent there, all the apparatus of gen- eral headquarters set a quivering in a flash.

Read his despatches (written en- tirely by himself, let us hasten to dis- pose of that idle hypothesis so of- ten heard when his reports are praised, "if he writes his own despatches") dispassionate, calm, and admirably lu- cid, written in the very midst of the turmoil of war. Mark the date of that splendid story of the great retreat, September 7 or two days after the French and British armies had gone over from the defensive to the offen- sive, and were in the act of driving the Germans back across the Marne. Note the strictly businesslike account of the operations, the almost cold language only warming when the writer pauses to speak of "the glori- ous stand of the British troops" or to bestow praise on his officers and regiments by name.

You can almost hear him say, "I will not dine to-day; I must write my despatch." You can almost see him seated in his room among his maps, building up sentence by sentence, amid the bustle of headquarters during a great advance, the deathless story that shall make an empire ring.

MYSTERY OF GHELUVELT.
See him during the battle of Ypres. This is his version (despatch dated November 20, 1914) of one of the most dramatic moments of the war, that critical hour on October 31 when literally the fate of the British empire trembled in the balance. "I was pre- sent with Sir Douglas Haig at Hooze between two and three o'clock on this day when the first division were re- turning. I regard it as the most critical moment of the whole of this great battle. The story of the first division and the recapture of the village of Gheluvelt at such a time was fraught with momentous consequences. If any one unit can be singled out for special praise it is the Worcesters. "The Chief" as Sir John is called throughout the army in France, pre- sides over his household in a benign and affectionate, almost a paternal manner, though in himself he is as young as the youngest A.D.C. The alarms and excursions of war are outwardly banished from his charming house though the to-and-fro of ord- eries and of staff officers at all hours of the day and night denotes the ceaseless activity going on with- in—London Mail.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

British News

The King recently visited Ports- mouth Dockyard, and the following message has been addressed by him to the Commander-in-Chief at Ports- mouth, Admiral Sir Hedworth Meux: "I am glad to have had the opportu- nity of visiting the important port under your command and seeing the dockyard and naval establishments. I should like you to express to the Ad- miral Superintendent, the heads of departments, and the workmen in the dockyard my appreciation of the task which, by their devotion to duty, they are taking in maintaining the strength and efficiency of the Fleet. I was much impressed by the smart and seamanlike appearance of all ratings which I saw at Wharfe Island and at the barracks. It reflects great credit on the officers responsible for their training and discipline."
