THE MEN WOMEN LIKE

Plain women, exaggerating their own lack of comeliness, ridiculously overvalue this quality in men. With them a handsome man has his cause half-pleaded.
An unlearned woman values a brainy man, whereas a brilliant woman often falls madly in love with and marries a fool. The average woman likes her husband a lover to surpass her in knowledge just sufficiently to save the situation when she needs assistance. She likes an available prompter. She wants him to have a handsome head only if the Lord wills. A business head she prizes far more.

She admires determination; but the man who frankly confesses himself in error is thrice a man in her eyes. An effeminate man she hates, as only a normal creature can its antithesis. He who conquers her is he who conquers himself. The more she loves him is this side of brutality—the more she is convinced of his superiority. She admires a man who dresses carefully, whose shoes, ties and collars are what they should be; but the glass-of-fashion man earns her contempt.

Generosity is admirable in her estimation; but a "waste-of-it" is an abomination in her eyes. Ambition she applauds; but it must not blot out Love. Rather a dinner of herbs where Love is than a banquet where ambition is chief god. The every-day woman has erected a shrine upon which is placed the small god Enos; him she will never see replaced.

A demonstrative man who also is a twin brother. There is something in woman that will not brook unfavorable comment. She believes all critics of the house of Judas. Were it possible to her to do so, to the thirty-fourth generation would she and her heirs forever remember the uncompromising man.

The average woman is not logical. She desires the wheel of fortune to circle rapidly her way, but objects to her lord toiling over hers oiling the cogs. In the main she is domestic; but when she is intent upon a gala night she reviles her lord who prefers "sweet home." Upon the other hand should he in turn manifest a desire to go where new congregations alone, the vials are unloosed. "Whither thou goest I still go," she says, and tries to.

He who is up-to-date rejects the feminine mind. If she is aught as a whole, woman is inquisitive. She cannot be in the movement outside of her man, but nothing that goes on is too trivial to be of interest to her. Moreover, while a male busybody is worse than an infidel, he who remembers details and piquant "gossamer" finds himself a favorite.

The male flirt and the man snob are like nooses to Madam Average. The man who designs his sister's gowns and is an authority upon needlework she classes among the lost. She abhors any unskirted creature who goes not in for many sports. A man without well-controlled sporting instincts she thinks only half a man.

A lone man she pities. As would she for any homeless creature, she creates for him a cozy corner in her heart (alack, at times she shamefully encroaches); still, ever for him, she has a pity in which there is something strangely akin to love.
Merciless she is to the frankly critical male. He who hopes to win her favor through criticizing her manners, methods or morals has a better chance of heaven, though he kills his manly man, is a miracle. Love is who the more when found. Woman is a vocal creature. Spoken love is the only sort in which she has any abiding faith. Wise is he who combats not this femininity, but lays up for kindly use an assortment of endearing adjectives. As long as a woman believes herself lovely and beloved in one man's eyes, he will continue to be the one man—otherwise? Perhaps otherwise!

Man is a creature of moods; woman of tenses. Her tenses often become intense, whereupon there is war in the dove-cote. Not that she minds, or, as she knows; for she knows that a man's temper is a man's man's mind. Upon the other hand, a man who rages continually scares Love toward the House of Lies.

She is frankly proud of Mr. Average. She considers other women's husbands as pignions or penitents to him. Moreover, she wishes him to be popular, but not too popular. It depends upon which sex is uttering the peons. A plain woman whose husband is correspondingly handsome especially prefers him to be admired by men.
Necessaries are eras in which good men fall from grace. Half the cardinal sins man may commit and find forgiveness; but let him throw ashes upon his head when he forgets an anniversary.

Summing up the man who pleases the average woman: He must be strong, courtly, tender, generous, neat, temperate, thrifty, loving, well-principled and complimentary; above all, complimentary, to merit favor.—Minna Thomas Antrim.

ITALY'S KING AS A FISHERMAN.

The King of Italy is very fond of fishing; but it is the one sport at which he has no luck. One day he was out for several hours, and was returning homeward with a keeper, on foot, with three poor fish on a string, when they met a poor man with a magnificent catch of trout. The peasant planted himself before the King and asked for a light for his pipe, and when he had received it, said with scorn:
"You seem to be no great things with regard to fishing. To look at your catch, I should say you were the King."
"Oh," returned the other, "he thinks very much of himself, but he is a poor body, more fit to be a King than a sportsman!"

JUDGED BY THE PATCH.

The Youth's Companion tells of a lady who had advertised for a skilled gardener to work by the day in her yard, and somewhat to her embarrassment, was obliged to choose between two applicants that appeared at the same moment. As she stood on her doorstep, questioning first one and then the other, she became aware that her mother-in-law, seated on the porch a short distance from the men, and directly behind them, was critically observing the proceedings.

The old lady, satisfied at last that she had attracted her daughter-in-law's attention, pointed unmistakably towards the less prepossessing of the two men; and the younger woman, supposing that her relative had some personal knowledge of the applicant, promptly engaged him.

"Has that man ever worked for you, mother?" asked the younger woman, when the two were alone.

"No," replied the old lady. "I never saw or heard of either of 'em until now."
"Then, why in the world did you choose the shorter man? The other had a much better face."
"Face!" returned the old lady, briskly. "When you pick out a man to work in the garden you want to go by his overalls. If they're patched on the knees you want him. If the patch is on the seat, you don't."

A MONUMENT OF PEACE

Argentina and Chili Permanently Mark Their Boundary to Commemorate the Peace Brought by King Edward.

Very fitting were the celebrations held recently on the frontier of Argentina and Chili to commemorate the lasting peace brought about between those two Republics by the arbitration award as to their boundary given by King Edward VII. two years ago. A gathering of the most notable men of both countries, accompanied by the British Ministers to Argentina and Chili, assembled on the Uspallata Pass of the vast range of mountains known as the Cordillera de los Andes, which mark the dividing line between the two nations. It had been decided to erect

ARGENTINA AND CHILI PEACE MONUMENT.

A lasting monument to the peaceful work of King Edward—a monument which should for all time definitely mark the boundary—and the form that this monument should take was appropriately agreed upon as a colossal figure of the Christ with outstretched arms preclaiming His sacred desire for "Peace upon Earth."

The idea was a beautiful one, and was executed with great artistic merit by the young Argentine sculptor, Mateo Alonso, with the result that the magnificent figure as now cast in bronze stands about 22 feet high, and weighs four tons. No more suitable spot for the erection of this historic landmark could have been found than that of La Cumbre, meaning the summit, of the Uspallata Pass, where it was inaugurated with great civil and religious ceremony.

The figure of the Saviour is represented holding out its arms, one towards Chili, the other to Argentina. His vestments fluttering to the mountain breeze. At the base is a bronze cast of two allegorical female figures representing Chili and Argentina in the embrace of peace.

CURING SICK GRAIN.

Hospital in Port Arthur, Ont., Where Wheat Is Curedly Nursed.

Most of us are familiar with hospitals and retreats where life and health may be restored to human beings and animals, but a new and interesting phase is a sanitarium for grain.

Plants and flowers are subject to disease, and the loss of crops throughout Canada and the United States alone has been estimated at some $18,000,000 it becomes imperative that an effort should be made to save the diseased grain. Very often farmers lose the whole crop because of being compelled to harvest in wet weather.

To the new hospital, which is located at Port Arthur, Ont., the farmers may send their grain to be treated and carefully nursed. After passing out of the care of the experts the grain is said to be cleaner and more wholesome than wheat which has not been subjected to this process. Convalescent wheat has been stored away and kept in perfect health for several years.

When the wheat, ill unto death, arrives, a nurse places it in a bath of pure water, where it is brushed and scoured in machines made for the purpose until the grains are highly polished and in good shape for the mill. It is then placed upon a bed made of screening and subjected to a jamming process, first of hot and then of cold air, until it is perfectly dry.

Again the grain is subjected to another cleaning process, after which it is ready to be returned to the owner, with the guarantee that it is thoroughly cured. Strange to say, when it is weighed it seems to have lost nothing, and, being all grain and no chaff, it weighs three or four pounds heavier to the bushel.

NEEDED A NERVE SPECIALIST.

Representative Bourke Cockran was seated in his law office one day recently when one of the clerks announced a visitor. The orator was very busy, but the man refused to tell his business to a clerk, insisting that it was a personal matter and he must see Mr. Cockran himself.

"Well, show him in," said the lawyer finally in disgust.

"I want to get some legal advice," Mr. Cockran," said the visitor, "and I came to you because I am a poor man and cannot afford to pay a real lawyer."

"What do you mean?" thundered the representative indignantly.

"Well, I mean that as a politician you will not be hard on one of your constituents. Besides, I have another claim on you. My aunt does washing for one of your cousins."

"My dear sir," said the lawyer in his most withering tones as he ushered the visitor out, "you don't want to see a lawyer. You want to see a nerve specialist."

WATCH THAT SPEAKS THE TIME.

A Swiss watchmaker has invented a watch which speaks the time from a tiny phonograph. A very small hard rubber plate has the vibrations of the human voice imprinted on it, and is actuated by clockwork, so that at a given time the articulation is made, indicating the hour. The utterance is sufficiently strong to be heard 20 feet away. It is possible by means of a device of this kind, to combine sentiment with utility, as the vibrations can be made by any clear voice, and a man's watch may tell him the time in the tones of wife or children.

Rather than say nothing men are content to speak ill of themselves.

The simple heart that freely asks in love, attains.
