(Reported by Mr. Pitts.)

At half past eleven on Wednesday evening, (April 25th.) and after the House had been in session for at least twelve hours continuously, and had listened to an extended and caustic speech of Mr. Hannington. Mr. Adams arose and stated that he degired an opportunity of making some observations in answer to the speakers on the Government side of the House, and particularly challenging the gross and absurd statements of the Attorney General, Blair, and therefore moved that t. edebate be adjourned until the next day, the Government sming the hour for resuming Mr. Adams had given no good reason why addening the was of the country should be proceeded with—it was only eleven thirty o'clock—and Mr. Adams had given no good reason why deleay should oc ur—the Government had decided a vote should be taken that night.

Mr. Adams in answer remarked that the House as objection of any question. A sense of duty now demanded that the bold challenge so recklessly laid down by the Attorney General should be carefully in the the mere occupancy of the floor did not advance or strengthen one's position, and his course had been not occupy more than necessary time in the discussion of any question. A sense of duty now demanded that the bold challenge so recklessly laid down by the Attorney General should be excepted at one, without delay, and therefore force than any hone member than any hone member to the provincial secretary secretics a surveillance over all other departments, provincial secretary to exercise a surveillance over all other departments, provincial secretary to exercise a surveillance over all other departments, provincial secretary to exercise a surveillance over all other departments, provincial secretary to exercise a surveillance over all other departments, provincial secretary to exercise a surveillance over all other departments, provincial secretary to exercise caution, all sources was $675, 452, 526, 51 and as under the bold challenge so recklessly laid down by the Attorney General should was quite a curiosity in its way, one last gigantic effort to cast disgrace upon his preaction, and he thought by asking the adjournment it was no more than any hon, members would do under like circumstances. The principle was a fair one, the late administration should seek, nay demand a fair and full opportunity of placing themselves right in the eyes of the people, and this mode of rovening the Opposition members from vindicating the acts of their Government which was going to present wished as a salve of the end redound to their discredit. He (Adams) simply desired to present to the House, as also the people, a true statement of our financial position, to show that this alleged indebt clones of $265,000 was and could not be proven by any evidence of fact. He claimed he was seeking no favour, only desirous that the privilege he and others granted should be conceded to them,—that government had never presented a full statement and ever presented a full statement and ever presented a full statement in the past had recognized this principle. He could neither understand why business has become so urgent, or the unseemly manner in which the leader was acting—in face of the fact that days after the opening the Government had never how and in face of the fact that days after the opening the Government had never how had not be opening the Government had never how had not be opening the Government had never how had not he proved by any evidence of fact. > | Mr. Blair here denied the statement. | Mr. Adams—Patience my friend—feel not have a defact of $265,000 in 18.000 in 19.000 in occasions when prayers were going on, a gentleman leaned over and tapping her on the sho ulder, remarked she was holding her book upside down; finding that she did not heed, once more repeated his previous remark. She turned around to him and in a severe and haughty manner said if he wanted to know why she held it in that manner it was because she always read left-handed. (Laughter) So my hon. friend (Blair) has been endeavouring to read the figures left-handed, and the result of his efforts has been almost inextricable muddle. When an almost inextricable muddle. When brought face to face with his record he has been obliged to qualify his precious statements and acknowledge that the country is not in so deplorable a condition as he formerly represented. What was the story told to the people in Westmorland, at Moneton in one of his campaign speeches. He (Adams) had on the platform in that Town christened him the great Provincial libeller, and public slanderer of public men, and he

Railway would tax the farmers for at least twenty years, direct taxation must inevitably follow, the financial position of our Province a matter of serious import &c., and so called upon "the farmers" to sustain his ticket—
"the people's ticket." This was the cry by this Champion of Political Reform, and as an answer to his boldness and disregard for truth they swamped his ticket by about 600 malority. In this connection he was amazed though it was well known at that time the Sources of Revenue.
