Murder Made Easy

THE LAW'S DANGEROUS LOOP-HOLES.

Is our system of death registration a peril to the community? At the Sanitary Inspectors' Conference, Sir W. E. Collins, M.D., intimated that it is, and nobody who knows the facts is likely to cross swords with him. One of the great evils of the system is that a doctor is not obliged to see the body of a person whose death he certifies, and that in consequence many "dead" people are still alive.

A medical student simulated certain diseases, for which he consulted a doctor, who was completely deceived. Shortly afterwards the patient, having disguised himself, called on the doctor, and actually got from him a certificate of his own death. Another medical man was tricked over a child he was attending for scarlet fever. Relatives of the patient, coming to his surgery, reported the child's death, which he certified without seeing the body. Only a few days afterwards he was called to the same house to see another child, and then certifies, and that in consequence many "dead" people are still alive.

Presumably the motive was fraud on an insurance company, which has undoubtedly been the object of many similar deceptions. A curious case happened in the East End of London. Two neighbours in a block of dwellings each had a child ill, and, while one of the patients was insured, the other was not. The uninsured child died in the middle of the night, whereupon the body was carried into the adjoining tenement and the insured child took its place. Next day the mother of that child reported its death, and the doctor gave a certificate, again without seeing the body. So one child was buried in the name of the other, and the two neighbours divided the insurance money.

There is an even more serious aspect of this looseness. It affords great facility for the concealment of murder. No doubt in some cases a doctor's suspicions would not be aroused if he did see the body; but there is often a possibility that a trained eye would detect something sinister. A nurse poisoned her mother with atropine, and the doctor, without seeing the body, certified that she had died from cerebral haemorrhage. On such certificate she was buried; but subsequently the nurse's crime was discovered, and two other cases of poisoning were also brought against her.

Murder is made no less easy by a different kind of slipshodness in connection with death certificates—slipshodness that makes it possible for people, supposed to be living to have been buried unknown to the authorities.

Boguary Without Risk.
A South London coroner was once notified that in a case where he had held an inquest, his burial order could not be found. As he was certain that he had issued it, the registrar went to the undertaker. "Oh," remarked the latter, carelessly, "perhaps it is one of these."

And, to the horror of the visitor, he produced six or seven of his (the registrar's) certificates!

He might have used one of these to bury anybody without the least risk of detection, and, though it is not alleged that he even thought of such a thing, there is a suspicion that some undertakers have not been equally innocent in similar circumstances.

Death certification has far too many loopholes, and a reform of the law relating to it is urgently necessary.

Treatment for Cancer Improve

New York Physicians Discover New Method For More Effective Use of Radium.

NEW YORK, October 23.—Physicians of the Memorial Hospital, New York, announce that by filtering out 90 per cent. of the caustic beta rays emanating from radium and the high voltage x-ray tube and using principally the heating and stimulating gamma rays, radium treatment of cancer of the tongue, lips, nose, ears, or other parts of the head, has been greatly improved.

This achievement is regarded by some of the highest cancer authorities of other institutions as one of the most important advances that has been made in the treatment of cancer since radium came into use for that purpose.

In the six months since the new methods have been under experiment, more than 100 cases have been treated with what are considered very satisfactory results. Owing to the elimination of the caustic rays, much stronger application of the beneficial rays can be used and painful effects are largely obviated.

I am gaining in weight all the time and I tell my friends what kind of medicine I am taking. You may use my letter as a help to others."—Mrs. JAMES PACHO, Box 12, Dublin, Ontario.
