In vain he had tried to coax her to give the damaging papers to him. It was the only point upon which she was firm; he could neither coax nor threaten her into telling him even where she kept the

They had had several battles-royal upon this point, in which he was invariably worsted in the conflict; in that, storm as he might, she would not give up the papers.

How he fumed, chafed, and execrated the chains he had forged and placed upon his letters, he was tempted to strangle her, bury her in the old garden, and trust to the popular fear of the haunted house to keep the murder hid till the grave gave up its dead.

Annette hesitated. What would Perry say, she asked herself. Then, remembering that she did not expect him that night, she yielded to a longing to see a friendly face, and replied:

you my wife."
"Do not speak of such a thing, Major," said Annette frowning. Why not? Are you married already?"

he asked.

She hardly knew what to say, she was so afraid of Perry. Her embarrassment and silence were construed by the quick-witted Major into an affirmative admission.

about you, telling her how I felt towards you. She said you had gone back to New York. And now I find you here. A ghost —married, you say, yet living alone in the most singular way. Is your husband a specter, too, for there is something mysterious about him—perhaps not right. Forget my foolish words about wanting you for a wife. Look upon me as a father, and confide your trouble to me, for I know you are in trouble by the change of your appearance."

"Am I so changed?" asked the girl sadly,

"Am I so changed?" asked the girl sadly, drying her eyes.

'I am sorry to say you are," answered Smith, who was nothing if not frank, "very much for the worse. Have you no female friend in whom you can confide?"

'I have not a friend in the world," answered Amette.

riend in whom you can confide?"

'I have not a friend in the world," answered Annette.

"Yes, you have—myself. Confide in me; perhaps I may be able to advise, if I cannot console, you."

She was silent, mentally debating whether or not to yield to her longing to unbosom herself of hersorrows. She still loved Perry, but she was beginning to realize that he no longer loved her; she was also beginning to be afraid that in some one of his unreasoning and ungovernable passions he might do her a injury.

She was entirely at his mercy. Even if he killed her, in that lonely dasolate place, who would know anything of her fate?

If she were to disappear, the few people in the vicinity who knew of her existence would in all probability suppose she had been frightened away from the haunted house, and make no inquiries as to what had become of her.

She was a creature of impulse at best, and now felt irresistibly impelled to confide in the man beside her.

"If I tell you anything I must tell you everything," she said with hesitation.

"Do so, without fear or reservation," answered Smith, setting himself back easily, to hear her story, which she told him, beginning with her childhood in that very house, an incident of her life she had never imparted to Perry.

Smith was careful not to interrupt her by so much as an exclamation, though mentally marveling much at the strangeness of her story.

How, to himself, the man cursed the dog-like fidelity with which the woman meekly endured every taunt, sneer, insult, and bit-terly cruel word.

Yet beyond a certain point even he, domi-neering and overbearing as he was, dared not provoke Annette—not that he would have cared what she might tell about him had she only her unsupported word to rely upon; but, oh, how he raged at his own rash folly at so committing himself. She had a number of his love-letters, in which he spoke of their approaching marriage; and 40 years ago.

A True invigorator.

Weakness and prostration of the nervous system surely follow that overwork and worry which brings sorrow and suffering to so many Canadian homes. The terrible results of nervous weakness, are seen on every hand. Pains in the back, poor and unrefreshing sleep, lack of appetite dys-pepsia, and lost energy and strength, are the first symptoms of more serious and danger-ous trouble. This is the way that Paralysis. Paresis and Insanity begin. Do not delay a moment longer, for some time it will be too late to regain your lost health and vitality. Use Paine's Celery Compound now, and the dull eyes will regain their brilliancy, the cheeks will grow rosy, the brilliancy, the cheeks will grow rosy, the brain become clear, the nerves strong and steady, your sleep restful and refreshing, appetite good, and health and happiness will take the place of misery and suffering.

A. Sabiston, the well known lithographer of Montreal, writes: "In the summer of 1888 I had to work very hard, and was troubled considerably with insomnia (sleeplessness). I resolved to try your Paine's Celery Compound, and after taking the contents of two bottles, felt like a new man. A good night's rest gave me strength for the duties of the day, and instead of starting out to business in the morning feeling as if I had completed a day's work instead of being about to commence one I started out in good spirits, feeling fresh and strong. My wife and various friends, to whom I recommended the medicine, have been benefited greatly, and in fact 'Paine's Celery Compound is a household word in our family."
