One Certain Way to Find Out What a Pitcher Has

Ball players who care more for their batting averages than they do to win ball games are soon discovered. They seldom find a place with a first-class

Frequently they are able to conceal their temperament. But as soon as they come off the ball field, where they have been beaten, go into the shower bath, laughing and singing, and then yell out, "It's me for a big fat steak tonight," out, "It's me for a big fat steak tonight," any self-respecting manager will either impose a fine or look around for a trade. Frequently during batting practice players will start in panning the pitcher who is warming them up. It's almost a certainty this pitcher has too much stuff on the ball to suit them. The hitters are afraid to stand up and bat. They like to shoot long and terrific liners to the outfield so the fans in the stands can cheer. But with a fellow putting the dope on the ball they are lucky to lay down a dinky grounder. down a dinky grounder.

Quebec, April 19. - Stanislaus Zbyszko, the Polish champion wrestler, failed to make good his claim that he would down Raymond Cazeaux three times within an hour in their match at the Auditorium Saturday night. Although the Pole had the better of the argument at all times he only managed to down his opponent twice in the sixty minutes, getting the first fall on a foul in 20 minutes, and the second in a little over 9 minutes. The Frenchman lived up to his reputation of being about the roughest grappler in the game, but he never had Zbyszko in serious danger.

ROYALTY'S RECOGNITION OF THE KNIGHT ENGINE.

To few men's lot falls such recognition of his efforts as that which has been awarded the inventor of the Sleeve Valve Engine by men of high positions, both here and abroad. The Knight Engine was first "royally" discovered by the present King of England when he was Prince of Wales, prior to the death of King Edward the Seventh, in 1909. King George had been given a careful and practical training in the navy and was thus in a position to appreciate the mechanical superiority the Knight Engine. His attention was one day called to the Knight Engine in the grounds of Buckingham Palace. He examined it critically, took a demonstration, and ordered a 38-h.-p. 4-cylinder forthwith, and was so well pleased with his new acquisition that the recommended his father to secure a car with this type of motor. Thus it came about that King Edward 2 placed an order for the first 6-cylinder Daimler car, which car was used almost exclusively during the remainder of his life. Royal orders followed 1 rapidly from the English Court, until today the Royal garage contains Knight motor cars almost exclusively, and the present King and Queen use
