They wanted the Government to take steps to prevent, entirely and completely, Sun day excursions in every form, and they emphatically stated that they did not care whether the majority of the people favored them or not. They contended that there was no demand for such traf-fic upon the Lords Day, excepting from those who were promoting the com-panies; and they asked that the Lord's Day Act providing against the pursuit of any ordinary employment on the Sab-bath be strictly put into operation. Under that law it was argued that, even supposing the people of Toronto did by vote ask for Sunday cars, the traffic could not be conducted. The running of cars in Toronto on the first day of the week they considered not a local question, but for the province to decide. Hardy Suggests "Moral Sussion."
