Satellite, 31, screw corvette, Capt. James C. Prevost has arrived at Madeira, after encountering terrific weather on her passage from Plymouth. A private letter states that she rolled tremendously yet easily, and closely hauled she behaved beautifully. For four days the hurricane lasted, putting her under close-reefed top-sails and storm-staysails, after which it lulled a bit, but with a heavy sea on, during which an unfortunate fellow, an ordinary seaman, named John Brewer, fell overboard.— "We viewed with most agonizing feelings the poor fellow struggling with his fate; for we scarcely dared to risk the lowering of a quarter-boat, and thus probably to sacrifice ten men's lives for one. Oh, how did we pray for Clifford's patent apparatus, which was so pressed upon our notice at Plymouth. When will that official routine which mars improvement, and makes human life the sacrifice, be abandoned, and the sailor have what he knows will work most advantageously? The poor man struggled very hard for his life, and twenty minutes elapsed before we could lower a boat, and when we did it only added to our misery to see the poor man throw up his arms in despair and sink before our eyes."

Viscar, Commander Ferneaux, made a splendid passage to Sierra Leone of only sixteen days from Spithead, and expected to be at the Cape of Good Hope by Christmas-day. Baron Von Stutterheim and the officers of the British German Legion on passage to the Cape were all well.
