Of all that comes across the rough and varied journey of life, there can be nothing more deadly and dis severing to the social affections which binds us to each other than the first falsehood.

Do good in this life, which passes away with the rapidity of a torrent. Do good not out of ostentation, and by the hands of others, but for the sake of heaven and with our own hands.

A tender-hearted and compassionate disposition, which inclines men to pity and feel the misfortunes of others and which is even for its own sake, incapable of involving any man in ruin and misery, is of all tempers of mind, the more amiable; and though it seldom receives much honor is worthy of the highest.

It seems rather extraordinary, that pride, which is constantly struggling and after imposing on itself, to gain some little pre-eminence, should so seldom hint to us the only certain, as well as laudable way of setting ourselves above another man, and that is by becoming his benefactor.
