

The Many Faces of Toronto

by Richard Chassie

TWO DECADES OF EXPLOSIVE GROWTH have created a city that is both the financial and commercial centre of Canada, and one of the most cultured cities in North America. But while economics have given Toronto its pulse, it is its people, from virtually every corner of the globe, that have given the city its soul. The result is a vibrant and sophisticated metropolis, described by some as “the world’s greatest new city”.
