

by a division of the province, in such a way as Nature herself has pointed out, to be perfectly adapted to the ease and security of the inhabitants. The government of Canada has, indeed, in its present form, been frequently the subject of animadversion, as being a system utterly incompatible with the liberty or prosperity of individuals. But, whilst Providence shall continue to bless the empire with a Sovereign, whose happiness is founded on that of his subjects, no part of them will be wanting in affection to his person, nor have cause to be dissatisfied with the mode of his government.
