

XLV. & XLVI.

THE RHINE.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

2 vols. beautifully printed, each 37½ cents.

"His descriptions are wonderfully spirited; full of nerve in their language, and picturesque truth in their detail; and the species of grotesque romance with which he invests the middle ages gives an interest to his scenes, persuading even the most plodding antiquary to pardon the occasionally fantastic heightening received by the picture from the warm fancy of the artist."—Quarterly Review.

"The very best book of its class that was ever put together—the best no less on the score of its research, industry and literary labor, and therefore of its completeness as a book of reference and practical utility, than as the most entertaining and intellectual of travelling companions, the most efficient and satisfactory of guides, and the most lively, amusing, and original of story tellers,—at least in that class of stories made up of the romantic and the grotesque, which are no less adapted to Victor Hugo's peculiar genius, than to the locality which has evoked them on the present occasion. His capital legend of 'Le Beau Pecopin,' is as fantastic, as brilliant, as rapid in its progress, and almost as powerful and impressive, as 'Vathek' itself.

"These 'Excursions along the banks of the Rhine' are written in the form of letters to a friend, and this very efficient English version of them has the rare merit of including the whole work; very properly repudiating the impertinence of taking upon itself to think for the English reader what portions he may or may not desire to have placed before him. It is literally a transfer of Victor Hugo's book from the French language and idiom to the English."—New Monthly Magazine.

---

XLVII.

FATHER RIPA'S RESIDENCE AT THE COURT OF PEKING.

TRANSLATED BY PRANDI.

1 vol. beautifully printed, 37½ cents.

"The combined singularity of the facts, and the mode of narration, render 'Father Ripa's Memoirs' as interesting a work as any that has appeared, not excepting 'Borrow's Bible in Spain.'"—Spectator.

"We have risen from the perusal of this delightful work with much satisfaction; our interest in it never abated."—Fraser's Magazine.

"The important crisis now impending renders this work extremely acceptable at the present moment."—Morning Herald.

"The information contained in this admirable work will be very important to those who wish to learn much about this great country."—Times.

"Worth a whole cart-load of modern travels."—Morning Chronicle