

easternmost of all his majesty's colonies on the continent of America; it is bounded on the east by Cape Breton, on the west by New England, and on the north by the great river of St. Lawrence.

There is no part of North America where they can boast of a more fertile soil, or any land that will produce grain with so little labour, even without the common labour of manuring of land.

The method by which the French inhabitants improve their lands is as follows: in the bay
