MARKET NOTES

The forty-ninth annual convention of the Canadian Press Association opened yesterday morning in the Temple building, under the presidency of A. H. U. Colquhoun.
 The president in his address said the aims of the press were both practical and ethical. They had to make money of perch, but the press as an institution regards its chief and supreme duty to be the rendering of public service, the forming of public opinion, and the exposure of wrong-doing. The measure of a newspaper's success was, happily, the courage with which it had done its duty under trying circumstances and against great odds. Wherever there was arbitrary government the press should bear in mind that the only rights and privileges associated with newspapers were enjoyed equally by all the citizens of the country.
