WOMAN'S WORLD.

SERIAL STORY.

Among the various books that have gained a widespread popularity during the present season, "Buchanan's Wife" ranks among the first. The author, Justus Miles Forman, has contributed much to the better class of fiction, but in this latest work he has given the public his best effort. The World has secured the serial rights, and on Wednesday will print the first installment of this striking novel. "Buchanan's Wife" is the story of a woman who, despite all obstacles, dared to win for herself the love and happiness that were denied her by cruel and relentless circumstances. It is a story that fills the reader with an all-absorbing interest from the first page to the last. Admirers of fiction can hardly expect of a more dramatic tale.

WORLD PATTERN DEPARTMENT

2410—A SMART CLOTH JACKET.

Some of the prettiest of the new jackets are simple enough to be made at home, and one which will please the particular woman is shown. The back is quite plain without seam or fineness, while the front has a few plaits at the belt. A trim little vest of another fabric gives a smart touch and renders it more becoming. The neck is finished with a strap instead of the troublesome collar, and the waist shows a narrow belt and peplum. The trimming straps may be of velvet, or the material stitched, and besides these no elaboration is needed. For the medium size 2 1/2 yards of 44-inch goods are necessary.

2410—5 sizes, 32 to 40 inches bust measure.

Some food is good to eat but not healthful. Other food is healthful but not good to eat. Malta-Vita, the perfect malted whole-wheat food, is both healthful and good to eat. It contains every food element necessary to the sustenance and good health of the human body.

spiritual life would not be endangered.

The drama, as exemplified by the life of Shakespeare, had failed to excite the interest accorded it in days past.

In some nations of the continent Europe, notably Germany, the true spirit of the drama was better understood and desired and practiced in the past.

Every time Shakespeare was played in America, one hundred presentations were given in the "fatherland."

A few pleasant moments were spent in the offices of the Western Assurance Company, when H. Horton Emerson here exercised greater control, and the experience, which has been mostly feminine, must be brought to bear, thru the fuller exercise of the franchise.

What of discipline, self-government, that has been tried and found good in the family will be more readily reflected and magnified in the state by woman's free participation in the political world. When we attain such consummation the state will have become something of a magnified and glorified family. Not until then shall we have simply and fully accepted the lesson of the family.

Conversely, the state influences the family, and the home always reflects either the good or the evil that pervades the nation. Woman's entry into the political world will set the government on a more just basis, and this broader and deeper national life will in turn, be reflected back to the home. Better government means better individuals, a better family life.

What the state finds out and practices thru higher civilization will likewise on a smaller scale, be tried in the home.

When nations tolerated no political freedom, and paid little regard to the rights of the individual, the family likewise. It used to be then that a son followed his immediate forefathers in his profession, or craft, in his politics, and in his religion. This tendency is to-day modified just in proportion as the civic policy encourages individual freedom. Modern government makes much of the individual, and the home profits by the example. Presently, everywhere we shall have the individual prepared and ready for freest action in all spheres.

When woman takes her place in the greater "world of affairs," the greatest impediment to her own personal progress will be removed, and this will be well for the home as well as for the state. In that particular sphere in the past, what may we not expect of her when she has attained the broader and higher levels that she, like man, attains by citizenship? The family will profit by having its greatest individual member made even greater.

The beneficent influences that may be abroad in the land will be observed and absorbed by women, and they, in turn, will harmonize with these, the influences in the home. This play and inter-play between these two powerful institutions will also mean mutual improvement. Each will be a mirror for the other, when woman exercises her power as justly and as freely in the one as in the other. Then, and only then, will the family and state begin to work hand in hand for the betterment of mankind.

THE DRAMA.

"Legitimate Drama, As Exemplified in Shakespeare" was the subject of an interesting address by Rev. W. F. Hinks in the Margaret W. Eaton School of Expression on Saturday afternoon.

The attendance was large and numbered among others many well-known literary and dramatic critics. The lecturer declared that the drama, by reason of the artificial veneer with which it was surrounded in the present day had lost or failed to retain its original work with which it had been entrusted. There was a true field which tended to elevate and ennoble life, but the modern play was not the place where the parent could send his child with the assurance that the moral and
