"It is not only unfair, but untrue," declared the controller, referring to the offending editorial.

He proceeded to quote figures to prove his contention. On the fire department there were 14 Roman Catholics, two of them captains and two lieutenants. Two of the captains of the city's sand pumps were of like creed, while, of 70 men employed in the waterworks service, 43 were of this religion. The city's chief engineer, James Bannon, was a Roman Catholic, and many more examples might be given.
