many teachers and clergymen as could be reached were notified and the conference opened this morning.

Rev Camon Richardson was in the chair and after a brief devotional service he introduced Canon Harrowers. In his address he referred to the illness of Bishop Kingdon and explained why the conference was held after being originally postponed.

Rev. Canon Harrower then took charge of the conference and delivered an interesting address dealing briefly with the subject which it was intended for him to take up yesterday afternoon, viz, "Old and New Methods in Sunday School Work." He said that while, in some lines, new methods of work had been adopted in Sunday schools yet in many instances the religious education of a child was carried on in very much the same way as in the time of our forefathers years ago. Christ found what was practically a parochial school of the synagogue. The old school of the synagogue was to a degree revived in the catechetical school of the early church which in turn was reflected in the university life of Alexandria. A comparison between the school of today and the early church was a deappointing one. The last thing taught in the early days was how to teach the children. The last thing taught in the early days was how to teach the children. The last thing taught in the early days was how to teach the children. The suggestion of some of the parishes, especially in the country, where resources were limited.

Canon Harrower said that in most cases the problem of adopting the Sabobath school lesson to difficulty. The last thing taught in the early days was how to teach the child and the teachers and that the New to teach the children. The last thing taught in the early days was how to teach the children. the semenaties today was how to catechise and teach, the children; the first thing taught in the early days was how to teach the children. The last thing taught to clergymen today was how to conduct a confirmation class, the first thing taught in early church was to catechise and teach. The preparation of clergy today who could properly catechise and teach children, was to say the least, discouragingly small. If it was true that a church could not be benefited or held except upon the basis of childhood then Sunday school work and a Sunday school conference were of more importance than most other lines of work. The old methods of arrangement were obselete today and when new methods were spoken of it meant that an effort was made to adapt the best general lines underlying all education to the work of the Sunday school, All Sunday schools could not be treated alike. Country schools and city schools must be treated differently.
