BOOK REVIEW

FICTION.

Here's to the Gods. By Austin Parker.

(Reviewed by John F. Carter, Jr.) Here is worse than heresy; here is lese-majeste. This book advances an idea which should make it profoundly repugnant to the sentimental reading public. Mr. Parker has the temerity to suggest that the love of woman is not the essential goal of a man, but accidental; that adventure, high-throned and colorful, a career, independence, can exert a sway more powerful than the homely manacles of marriage or the lure of unpermitted liaison. All of which the writers of Europe, who hold that "love is woman's life; life is man's love," have proclaimed for centuries, which is not argument that it is a true theory, nor proof that it is false.

To fancy that the mechanism of life is all powerful is to ignore many exceptions. To argue from these exceptions that man's real desire is for a life in which he can "put another with a machine gun, take a drink because he's thirsty, and love a woman because he wants her," is also bad reasoning. There are many men who hanker after a grand, free, and glorious existence, but who are really too completely wedded to orderliness to relish such a change as their wishes would imply, and there is a large body of feminist opinion which holds, with much force, that men alone are responsible for marriage, morality, and kindred shibboleths. To point to exceptions in the vast army of married men does not mean impending mutiny in their ranks, and Mr. Parker has not advanced so absurd a thesis, but it does supply fascinating material for a novel, and of this material Mr. Parker has taken advantage.

TRAVEL.

We Explore The Great Lakes. Recorded by Weston Patton Waldron. New York: The Century Company. One can scarcely imagine a more varied and fascinating trip than that which Mr. and Mrs. Waldron describe in these pages. Starting from Buffalo in a Great Lakes freighter, they steamed up those inland seas, part of the "pageant of inland commerce," where in ships of every kind and size, and often in ludicrous contrast, lumber and ore and wheat meet; cool and cement and machinery. In the mighty streams of traffic between East and West, and then by passenger boat, row boat, fishboat, railroad train, motor bus, automobile and on foot they visited great lake-shore cities, sleepy hamlets, sand dunes, islands, adventures here and there as fancy led them. But they always found fascinating things to investigate and interesting people to talk with. So charming from beginning to end is the book they have made about their journey that it is difficult to give in short space an adequate idea of its varied contents.

We Have Just Received the Game of Mah- Jongg or Pung Chow

This is something very new here and promises to be in great demand. The game is known in England as "Shanghai." Mah-Jongg is the accepted form throughout the world, of the ancient Chinese game as introduced into Union and American clubs of Shanghai by Mr. J. P. Babcock, who originated the name "Mah-Jongg," adapted all that was best of the ancient Chinese form of play for his copyright rules, and added the Arabic numerals to the tiles.

Avoid imitations if you wish to play "Mah-Jongg."

Prices range from $7.50 to $32.00.

Better grades have tiles of ebony and ivory. Mah-Jongg Card Game $3.25.

her books but one have long been out of print, and partly, perhaps, to the fact that she was a passionately loyal Roman Catholic, and readers may have been frightened away thinking groundlessly that her writings would be narrowly sectarian. Whatever the cause, the large volume describing her life and works will be the first contact that many will make with the distinguished author, who was born in 1861 and died in 1920. Remembering these points, her biographer has included (very wisely) extensive quotations from Miss Guiney's principal works, so that the reader may judge for himself of their literary quality. It is to be hoped that the process of education thus begun so badly will be supplemented in the near future by the issue of a complete set of Miss Guiney's writings.

Hear Dr. Crossley in Esmouth street church tonight. Subject, "Seven Wrong Views of God."

Colonel E. I. Drake in 1898 drilled the first oil well.

The Baptist Ministers' Institute of the city convenes at 8 o'clock tonight and evening at the home of Rev. and Mrs. A. L. Telford 13 Waterloo street with Rev. Dr. S. S. Poole in the chair. Those present were: Rev. and Mrs. G. B. MacDonald, Dr. and Mrs. S. S. Poole, Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Sweetnam, Rev. James Dunlop, Mrs. C. T. Clark, Rev. Dr. R. Heine, Rev. O. S. Morse, Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Robbins. Mr. Dunlop opened the session with prayer. Rev. Dr. H. T. Crossley and J. H. Leonard sang a solo very effectively. Dr. Crossley spoke on the characteristics of a successful minister. A resolution of sympathy was to be forwarded to Rev. Dr. David Hutchinson in his recent bereavement. Mr. Robbins presented a report on church advertising and the executive reported on the programme and entertainment for the year. Dr. Poole presented a very scholarly paper on "The Second Coming of Christ." An interesting discussion followed. The meeting adjourned to enjoy the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Telford, to whom a hearty vote of thanks was extended.
