W. H. Culbert has had plans prepared for the opening up of a street on his property to run from Church Avenue to Peter street. This promises in the near future to become one of the very nicest residental portions of the town, as sev-eral prospective purchasers of lots have practically settled on their sites for buildings. Real estate in Sussex today is a very valuable asset. Some of the real estate moves of the week beside the sale of land to the dominion government for a drill hall, have been the sale of the house on Essex street, owned by Walter Lutz to Harry Clark, of the Beverage Co., also property situate on School street, owned by Harold Dryden, of Kal-ispell, Montana, to Burpee Freeze and property at the corner of St. George St. known as the old Jenner place, owned by S. ence of a many-sided and harmonious whole. "But what he was he gave-gave with such ease and exuberance that I think it may be said without exaggera-tion that wherever he moved he seemed to radiate vitality and charm. He was, as we here know, a strenuous fighter. He has left behind him no resentments and no enmity; nothing but a gracious memory for a manly and winning per-sonality--the memory of one who served with an unstinted measure of devotion his generation and his country. He has been snatched away in what we thought was the full tide of buoyant life still full of promise and of hope. What more can we say? We can only bow once again before the decrees of the Supreme Wisdom. Those who loved him--and they are many, in all the schools of opinion, in all ranks, and walks of life --when they think of him, will say to themselves:--The provided to attend. "The bounty of nature, enriched and developed not only by early training, but by constant self-discipline through life, blended into him gifts and graces which, taken alone, are rare and in such attractive union are rarer still. Body, mind, and enarcter—the school-room, the cricket field, the bar, the House of Commons—each made its separate con-tribution to the faculty and the experi-ence of a many-sided and harmonious whole.

was in these words: "It would not, I think, be doing jus-tice to the feelings which are uppermost in many of our hearts if we passed to the business of the day without taking notice of the fresh gap which has been made in our ranks by the untimely death of Mr. Alfred Lyttleton. It is a loss of which I hardly trust myself to speak for, apart from ties of relation-ship, there had subsisted between us for thirty-three years a close friendship and affection which no political differences were ever allowed to loosen or even to affect. Nor can I better describe it than by saying that he, perhaps, of all men of this generation, came nearest to the mould and ideal of manhood, which every English father would like to see his son aspire to, and if possible to at-tain.
