The Evening Chit-Chat By RUTH CAMERON

HE Very Pretty Girl, being in a bad mood, had been treating the Very Devoted Young Man with the most studied arrogance during the whole She had ordered him hither and you with almost insulting tyranny.

She had refused an invitation of his with a shortness that was decidedly rude.

She had contradicted him flatly several times and laughed at him again and gain with the unpleasant laughter that savors of mockery rather than friendly again with the unpleasant laughter that savors of mockery rather than friendly fun.

When he had finally taken his leave, the sandy haired, plain little girl who shared the Very Pretty Girl's apartment with her, cried reproachfully: "How could you treat him so? I think you were perfectly horrid to him."

The Very Pretty Girl sank down in the most comfortable chair—which he habitually arrogated to herself—and laughed with evident delight.

"He seems to like it pretty well, doesn't he "she responded. "While you were out in the kitchen he just begged to come again day after tomorrow, and I told him I thought I had nothing else to do than sit around with him every evening he was very much mistaken."

The sandy haired little girl looked at the Very Pretty. Girl a moment, just about the way anyone who knew the value of jewels would look if he saw a child throwing a very wonderful pearl or diamond into the water—only much more so—opened her mouth as if to say something and then shut it again and walked out into the kitchen and started to wash the chafing dish—a part of apartment bliss which the Very Pretty Girl most decidedly did not arrogate to herself.

Whereupon the Very Pretty Girl sat back in the most comfy chair and laughed aloud to herself, enjoying at the same time the silverness of the laugh and the recollection of the Very Devoted Man's discomfiture.

Altogether, she felt that she had been most clever and brilliant in walking over a human being just because he was chained down by an infatuation into a position where she could walk upon him

You see she was forgetting several little facts.

She was forgetting that no matter how willing to endure rudeness and arro-things.

She was forgetting that no matter how generous and ready to give everything and receive almost nothing in return a man in love may be, it is just as selfish and soul-killing for a woman to get in the habit of taking everything and making no proper return.

The Very Pretty Girl—and her hundreds and thousands of sisters, incidentally—who forget all these things always think that their attitude is fascinating and Some day, perhaps, they will find out the contrary.

And then for a time they will be very unhappy.

But it will be a blessed unhappiness, for it will bring wastly greater and truer happiness in its train.

CHILDREN AND VACANT LOTS

(Ottawa Journal).

The New York Herald of recent date contained an interesting account of how an effort is being made in that city to provide play places for the poorer children on vacant lots, in districts removed from the ordinary city parks and play grounds. The big city is interesting itself in the matter, and the owners of vacant property in many cases have removed the fences and levelled off the property at their own expense, in order that the children should have immediate access to a play place that would keep them off the city streets.

It may be that a policy such as this is only necessary in the larger cities. Yet in a walk about Ottawa any afternoon, especially on those streets where houses are built close together, children by the hundred may be seen playing on the pavements and the sidewalks, in some cases almost under passing horses feet. Children as a rule, until they reach the age of ten or eleven, do not play far from their own homes; it is better that such should be so. Ottawa has few playkrounds, and these are often far remaining account of how an effort is being made in that city to child population is most dense, there child population is most dense, there child population is most dense, there is generally a few available vacant lots, which, at small expense, could be made ideal play spots. Nearby residents would not object, as it is surely better to have the noise and movement of the children's play concentrated in one spot than to have them all over the neighborhood. Such certainly is safer, as the number of accidents met with by children on the steets during their play amply testifies. In fact, the New York plan seems to be one that can, with little expense, be adopted anywhere to the physical and moral benefit of the children of the neighborhood.

Perhaps some generous property holder, happy in the knowledge, that any Ottawa property is growing more valuable almost weekly will spend the small preliminary amount necessary in preparing his property to give this experiment a local opportu N. can continent.

"The discovery of the deposit was quite by accident," said Mr. Savage. "After travelling several months through various parts of eastern Washington and Oregon, the northern part of Idaho and western Montana in search of material for making glass and finding nothing suitable, I returned to Spokane and was ready to abandon the work, when I visited the exhibit rooms of the chamber of commerce, where I found a sample of silica in the mineral cabinet. cabinet.

"The label was torn off the sample and there was, no way to ascertain where it was obtained. Finally, after a long search and hunting up a former caretaker in the employ of the commercial organization, I learned it was picked up in the northern part of Spokane county. J. S. Gillespie, correspondence secretary, recalled having heard some one say it was found about fifteen miles north of this city. I did not lose any time in striking out and after searching several days. I located the deposit, which is a veritable mountain, and immediately closed a deal to purchase the land."
