Taken the time to think, to study out, what Fire Insurance can do to safeguard your business? It will literally place your business in an easy position—it places every de-partment, every phase, every detail of a business on a firm, secure footing, making it easy for you to do your best work by freeing your mind from the worry and fear of all re-sults which follow the uncontroll-able elements of Fire and Lightable elements of Fire and Engui-ning. But the QUALITY of the Fire Insurance you buy is of vital importance. However, you are as-sured by the protection behind each Policy issued; by its long record of uninterrupted service; by its sterling reputation, as one of the oldest and strongest Fire Insurance

In the course of the conversation he said that one of the ressons why he judged that his man was not what he had represented himself to be and that he was very hard up was the fact that the fellow that question had worn the same suit from the first time he came to twen. "Here in the world of frock coated statesmen nothing really interesting is to be expected." She walked her horse again. It oc-curred to her that he might wish an assurance of silence from her. What she had seen would make a capital bit of gossip, to say nothing of being ma-terial for the newspapers, and her conscience as she reflected grew uneasy at the thought of suiciding him. She knew that her father and mother and, even more strictly, her brother would close their doors on a man whose ene mies followed him over seas and lay in wait for him in a peaceful park, but here she tested him. A man of breeding would not ask protection of a woman on whom he had no claim, and it was certainly not for her to establish an understanding with him in so strange and grave a matter. "It must be fun having a ranch with cattle on a thousand hills. I always wished my father would go in for a western place, but he can't travel so far from home. Our ranch is in Vir-"You have a Virginia farm? That is

"Yes; at Storm Springs. It's really beautiful down there," she said simply. It was on his tongue to tell her that he, too, owned a bit of Virginia soil, but he had just established himself as a Montana ranchman, and it seemed best not to multiply his places of residence. He had, moreover, forgotten the name of the county in which his preserve lay. He said, with truth: "I know nothing of Virginia or the oth but I have viewed the landscap from Arlington, and some day I hope to go adventuring in the Virginia

He dimly understood as he left her in a gay mood at the Claiborne house that she had sought to make him forget the lurking figure in the park thicket and the dark deed thwarted there. It was her way of conveying to him her dismissal of the incident, and it implied a greater kindness than any piedge of secrecy. He rode away with grave eyes, and a new hope filled his heart.

Chapter X

RMITAGE dined alone that evening and left the hotel at 9 o'clock for a walk. He unaffectedly walk. He unaffectedly enjoyed paved ground and the sights and ways of cities, and he walked aimlessly about the lighted thoroughfares of the capital with conscious pleasure in the movement and color of life. He let his eyes follow the Washington monument's gray line starward, and he stopped to enjoy the high poised equestrian statue of Sherman, to which the starry dusk gave something of legandary and old world charm.

Coming out upon Pennsylvania avenue, he strolled past the White House and at the wide flung gates paused while a carriage swept by him at the lriveway. He saw within the grin face of Baron von Marhof and uncon sciously lifted his hat, though the am-bassador was deep in thought and did not see him. Armitage struck the pavement smartly with his stick as he walked slowly on, pondering, but he was conscious a moment later that ome one was loitering persistently in his wake. Armitage was at once on the alert with all his faculties sharp-ened. He turned and gradually slackned his pace, and the person behind him immediately did likewise.

The sensation of being followed is at first annoying. Then a pleasant sest creeps into it, and in Armitage's case the reaction was immediate. He was even amused to reflect that the shadow had chosen for his exploit what is probably the most conspicuous and the best guarded spot in America. It was not yet 10 o'clock, but the streets were comparatively free of people. He slackened his pace gradually and threw open his overcoat, for the night was warm, to give an impression of ease, and when he had reached the somber facade of the treasury building he paused and studied it in the glare of the electric lights as though he were a chance traveler taking a preliminary view of the sights of the capital. A man still lingered behind him, drawing neaser now, at a moment when they had the sidewalk comparatively free to themelves. The fellow was short, but of soldierly erectness and even in his lottering pace lifted his feet with the quick precision of the drilled man. Armitage walked to the corner o Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenti street, then turned and retraced hi steps slowly past the treasury building. The man who had been following faced about and walked slowly in the opposite direction, and Armitage, quickening his own pace, amused him-elf by dogging the fellow's step dealy and spoke to the man in the casual tone he might have used in ad-

"But the thing won't do! If you are

"Then if you are not hired you are your own master, and you serve your self ill when you take the trouble to follow me. Now I'm going to finish my walk, and I beg you to keep out of my way. This is not a place where liberties may be infringed with im-punity. Good evening, sir!" Armitage wheeled about sharply, and as his face came into the full light of the street lamps the stranger star him intently. Armitage was fumbling in his nock et for a coin, but this impertinence caused him to change his mind. Two policemen were walking slowly toward them, and Armitage, annoyed by the whole incident, walked quickly away.

He was not wholly at ease over the meeting. The fact that Chauvenet had so promptly put a spy as well as the ssin on his trail (kened his pulse with anger for an instant and then sobered him. He continued his walk and paused presently before an array of books in a shop window. Then some one stop-ped at his side, and he lokoed up to find the same man he had accosted at the treasury building lifting his hat, an American soldier's campaign hat. The fellow was an extreme blond, with a smooth shaved, weather beaten face blue eyes and light hair, "Pardon me. You an

John Armitage turned again to the window, leaned lightly upon the iron railing and studied the title of a book attentively.
