

THE PAIN DISCUSSED IN A THOUGHTFUL ADDRESS

Strong and Eloquent Sermon Delivered by Rev. J. A. Morrison, D. D., in First Presbyterian Church of Carleton, Yesterday Morning—Bible Book of Happy People.

In the First Presbyterian church, of Carleton, yesterday, the pastor, Rev. J. A. Morrison, D. D., preached a strong and eloquent sermon on the "Bible Book of Happy People." The message of the Old Testament is "Happy is the people whose God is the Lord," and this note is echoed by the New Testament, which tells us "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice."

While the path of Solomon's wisdom and of Christian philosophy is represented by these two books, yet the Bible is the book of a happy people. The message of the Old Testament is "Happy is the people whose God is the Lord," and this note is echoed by the New Testament, which tells us "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice."

By this He does not mean that tears and smiles are synonymous; He means that the people who have the power to feel sorrow—to be sensitive to danger—are the people who are to be congratulated. Mark you, this power to mourn is not a weakness possessed by people. A friend once said to me, "When I was a child I did not feel the sorrows that seem to weigh heavily upon our family. Often times I used to see father and mother grieved and anxious and I felt another guilty that I did not also feel grieved with them, but I simply could not do it. It is the power to sorrow is a development which marks life's higher phases and deeper experiences."

The Bible and the idiot do not have the power to mourn. This power marks the ampler stages of human development and is a revelation of character. So many human disappointments are God's appointments that sweet are the uses of adversity. Let me illustrate this principle.

Savage Lander Explorer. One of the most thrilling tales of modern times is the story of the exploratory journey of Mr. Savage Lander, from Rio de Janeiro to the Pacific Ocean, a transcontinental journey of some 12,750 miles. The interior of Brazil, which is almost as large as the United States, up to the year 1912 has been an unknown land, and was regarded by the Brazilians themselves as a revelation of a strange country. The successful crossing of this vast domain by the intrepid explorer, Mr. Savage Lander, has revealed the world, added much to the knowledge of geographical science and placed the whole world under obligation to this dauntless English traveler.

The wanderlust is surely in his veins and this recent record of his trans-Atlantic American journey is not the first story of his adventures that has caught the imagination of the world. For many years he journeyed over the beaten track in the Far East. In 1897 he penetrated the closed and forbidden land of Tibet. On this journey he was taken prisoner by the inhabitants and condemned to death. His execution, however, having been postponed for some days, in order that they might torture him, he succeeded in making good his escape but not without carrying with him the scars of 23 wounds and other horrible evidence of the excruciating tortures to which he had been subjected.

Then in 1900 he accompanied the allied troops to Pekin at the time of the Boxer massacres and the following year he rode from Russia to Calcutta, through Persia, Afghanistan and Beluchistan. Five years later he journeyed across Africa at its widest part. In his recent journey across South America he encountered almost insuperable obstacles. Upon his arrival at Goyas, where he had hoped to secure some 30 men, he was regarded with universal hostility and after parleying with the natives for 14 days he was able to induce only 2 men to join him. The governor, however, came to his rescue and provided him with 6 men, intimating to him that they were all criminals, and starting out with them, soon he discovered to his cost that this particular governor was a most truthful man. In a few days about half of these men deserted him, stealing large quantities of ammunition and supplies. Time and again the man who had remained with him proved traitorous. Like La Salle, the discoverer of the Mississippi who was treacherously shot by one of his men, this man narrowly escaped being murdered and on another occasion his men cast into the river the bulk of the food supplies in order to compel him to turn back. He encountered dangers in the forests and on the cataracts of unknown rivers and he writes that for many long miles the country through which he was compelled to pass was infested with swarms of insects, a terrible species of ants.

These sauba ants are the most destructive known to the students of natural history and one night they entirely destroyed his boots. For 16 days he, with his two remaining men, battled onward through the wilderness, barefooted and without food. Time and again their weakness was so great that they fell down in a faint and he tells us that had it not been for the intense pain produced in their bodies by the attacks of these vicious sauba ants, they would never have survived, but would have died and their bones rotted under these far away skies.

To these terrible ants and the pain they produced, he declares that they owed their lives. This resolve was King Solomon, a citizen of an empire vaster in extent than that mighty Oriental monarch had ever dreamed of confining with him that sorrow is better than laughter.

WIFE SAYS THAW'S ARREST TAKES LOAD OFF HER MIND

Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw received the news of Harry K. Thaw's arrest with unrestrained joy. She has expressed the belief frequently that "I saw would kill her at the first opportunity, and she had been apparently ill at ease after his escape. Although she had affected confidence in her safety, she made no effort to conceal the fact that his capture afforded her a keen sense of relief."

That has impelled Mrs. Vanderbilt in New York and Mrs. Jordan, in New Brunswick, to provide up-to-date sanitariums for tubercular patients. Thus sorrow is better than laughter for out of the sorrow of a diseased race is evolving a more exact science and a finer spirit of altruism.

The Human Slaughter House. Quite recently in Germany there has been published a book that has shocked, and started, and irritated the nation. It is entitled "Menschenschlachthaus," (the Human Slaughter House). In commenting on this book, Harold Begbie, writing in the London Daily Chronicle, has said: "This little book, chock-full of shuddering horror, grisly with raw and bloody bones, nauseating with the reek and stench of a shambles, is described by Teuton Falstaff as the morbid phantasm of a hysterical neuropath, but it has sold 100,000 copies; it is well calculated to put the buckram of German Caesarism, and cancer, calmer, fiercer work of his kind has never come my way. Let every grown man so dead in his imagination as to speak of the glory of war, read this book and forever after revise his vocabulary."

As I pointed out a week ago, society is increasingly being sensitized as to the blood and wounds and waste of war and by this process of sensitization there is being created a growing sentiment against war and a practical disposition on the part of humanity to remove the conditions that make for strife. There again we see that sorrow is better than laughter and by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better.

The Testimony of Literature. This principle is also illustrated by the pages of the world's best literature. John Bunyan would never have penned his immortal allegory had it not who became prime minister, and the long ranks of men bowed down with discouragement, would never have found the cheer of the Book of Job. Take out of the later history of the same nation the stories of Gethsemane and Calvary and the world would still be looking in vain to the philosophy of Socrates and of Sakya-muni for the way that leads to life.

Have you never wept with a grief that slowly passes, Have you never laughed when joy goes running by? Have you not the peace of rest that follows labor? You have not learned to live, then, how can you dare to die?

In the history of the world's pathfinders; in the presence of disease and war; in the brain and heart of the world's best writers; in the holy way of the Cross of Christ, sorrow is better than laughter, for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better.

So it also in the deepest experiences of the soul. To be conscious of sin and alienation from God. To be lost to an experience of the love of Christ, to hope of heaven—this is the greatest sorrow of all; but here also the soul bowed down in penitence and faint may discover that sorrow is better than laughter and the words of Christ have a new meaning and power when He whispers to the penitent: "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted," and finding at the Cross a new forgiveness the soul redeemed in Christ is often free with the comfort wherewith it is comforted of God.
