

for about two years, he came to this country, and in the year 1818 was accepted by the district meeting in Halifax, and sent into circuit work. Thenceforth, until 1863, he laboured with much acceptance in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and New Brunswick. Painsstaking and zealous in the performance of duty, he looked well to every department of his charge, but always felt unsatisfied unless the interests of vital Godliness were prospered in his hands.

In the reduction of Church and Parsonage debts and in the diffusion of Methodist literature he was eminently successful; and in more direct evangelistic effort he was greatly honoured by God. Extension and powerful revivals of religion frequently occurred under his Ministry.

The last eight years of his life were spent as a supernumerary at Sackville. He preached occasionally, and otherwise improved his opportunities of doing good. He took a lively interest in our Educational Institutions, and was ever ready to help and encourage both those who taught and those who received instruction in them. In him was truly exemplified the life and peace of the spiritually minded, and so when his final sickness came, no cloud of doubt shadowed his horizon. His frequent remark was: "I only wished to live so long as I might be useful; I can now do nothing more, and only wait God's will." Suddenly came to him the summons of the Master, and unseen by mortal eye, he passed through the valley of death, and entered into the joy of his Lord, in the seventy-seventh year of his age and the fifty-fourth of his Ministry.
