itself into a confused jumble of pirouetting stars, chairs, shirt-fronts, and electric lights, and he fell forward in a boneless heap. There was a noise of rushing waters in his ears, and mingled with it, the sound of voices. Some person or persons, he felt dimly, seemed to be making a good deal of an uproar. His brain was clouded, but the fighting instinct still worked within him; and, almost unconsciously, he groped for the lower rope, found it, and pulled himself to his feet. And then lights went out.

How long it was before he realized that the lights had actually gone out, and that the abrupt darkness was not due to a repetition of "it" he never knew. But it must have been some length of time, for when the room became suddenly light again his head was clear, and, except for a conviction that his neck was broken he felt tolerably well.

His eyes having grown accustomed to the light, he saw with astonishment that remarkable changes had taken place in the room. With the exception of some half-dozen persons, the audience had disappeared entirely, and each of those who remained was in the grasp of a massive policeman. Two more intelligent officers were beckoning to him to come down from the platform.

The New York police force is subject to periodical attacks of sensitiveness with regard to the purity of the city. In between these spasms a certain lethargy seems to grip it, but when it does act its energy is wonderful. The East Side Delmonico's had been raided.

It was obvious that the purity of the city demanded that Freddie should appear in court in a less exiguous costume than his present one. The two policemen accompanied him to the dressing room.

On a chair in one corner sat the Tennessee Bear-Cat, lacing his shoes. On a chair in another corner sat Mr. Franklyn Bivatt, holding his head in his hands.

Fate, Mr. Bivatt considered, had not treated him well. Nor, he added mentally, had T. Mortimer Dunlop. For directly the person, to be found in every gathering, who mysteriously gets to know things in advance of his fellows had given the alarm, T. Mortimer, who knew every inch of "Blinky's" basement, and, like other dead game sports who frequented it, had his exits and his entrances—particularly his exits—had skimmed away like a corpulent snipe and vanished, leaving Mr. Bivatt to look after himself. As Mr. Bivatt had failed to look after himself, the constabulary were looking after him. "Who's the squirt?" asked the first policeman, indicating Mr. Bivatt.

Cupar, Sask., Dec. 9th, 1912

Gentlemen:—Am pleased to say that the Hart-Brown Wing Carriers and Dump Racks purchased through you this fall have given entire satisfaction.

By using these wings on my separator (a 40-inch cylinder), I saved $26.00 a day and the separator does better work, being fed more evenly than is possible without the wings.

Yours truly,

JAMES ORMISTON.
