BUILDING A RAILROAD ON THE WAR FRONT

Work of Canadian Construction Units In France of Incalculable Value To The Armies; Not Like Work on a Transcontinental Line

War Correspondents' Headquarters, France, Aug. 1.—(By mail)—Building a military railway is not like constructing a transcontinental. You don't quite know what the route will be, and your right of way has to be purchased with blood and shells. But you have to make a road bed and string rails just as swiftly perhaps more so, for the penalty clause in the contract is defeat.

I couldn't find the colonel of the Canadian railway battalion I visited. He was somewhere out in front among the field ambulances where disgruntled German shells were still bursting, locating the grade for his next section, through the quagmire of a much fought-over No Man's Land. But the adjutant was there, in a battered estaminet which had been altered yesterday, an advanced dressing station. His painter—they carry painters and divers too—had changed the Red Cross symbol into the sign that means Canadian Railway Construction Corps, and which has a Canadian brigadier whose name is a textbook in railway construction at its best. The adjutant had his hand glued to the telephone and he was asking how his trains of material were coming along.

When you at home read that "the guns were being brought up satisfactorily" and that there "has been heavy rains all day," you picture struggling teams of horses dragging batteries into advanced positions. There are some of these old pictures of the war left, but they are few and far between. Sometimes the gun and ammunition have to take the muddy streaks, but if luck is the least with us now they go over well planked roads where hauling is fairly light, and by the time the roads are getting nearly worn of the traffic the railway is there. We learned the value of lumber and railways at the Somme.

On a huge stand, such as you might see at the draughtsman's office at railhead on construction at home, there was a large scale map of what was called "Germany in Flanders." There are blue and red lines which began behind our old trenches and end nowhere—perhaps on the Rhine. There are the standard gauge and the light railways, and they are wanted quickly. Already this particular two thousand yards of advance had been plotted out with little stakes and tapes and the Red Cross symbol of heavy artillery was putting the finishing touches to the plan. He had worked with the Canadian adjutant before they both knew what speed meant, and he was eager to build a spur for a twelve-inch howitzer a few yards farther east, the gunner saved the bulker the concession and phone back to get his ranges corrected accordingly. If the gun had to go to that particular spot this Toronto captain would put on another hundred men for the job and build through the crater. There was no argument. Each knew the other knew his job.

Some of the material was already up. British labor parties under the direction of a Canadian major who had worked gangs on the prairies and in the western mountains were out in the shell-pocked area making the first thousand yard grade. The new railroad which had been advanced from yesterday was fast filling up with metals, fishplates, spikes and ties. There were just enough for the length to be built. Right and left hand switches were labelled for the stations and gun spurs where they would be laid. The junctions and station were symmetrical, named after the places, big and little, in the Dominion, where they were torn up months ago and cast into this melting-pot of the empire's war. Am not giving the names that are on the map, but don't be surprised if to-morrow or this week you hear that this new Regina, or Lang, or even Ottawa has been shelled. There will be a good eight or twelve, perhaps fifteen-inch howitzer to give an account of itself there.
