Since the announcement by Sir Robert Borden that an additional two hundred and fifty thousand troops were to be raised in Canada, there has been considerable discussion among recruiting officers here and others interested as to what. Nova Scotia's share would be. That this Province will be asked to give a number of men fully proportionate to her population and that those men will be forthcoming is undisputed, but no details have been given out from Ottawa as yet. Suggestions on the part of local people interested, however, are not lacking.
