CITY-POPULATION-WESTMINS

London, July 1, 1884,—Everyone who visits London for the first consider that it contains a greater number of people than the whole of Canada. It is so divided, however, that it is comparatively easy for a person to find his way through this world of people, with its streets running in all directions, and through the bustle of every-day life, and the whir of vehicles of all descriptions, which never stops. Its omnibus lines, tramways and underground railways, afford ample means of church of the oratory at Brompton, the whispering gallery of St. Paul's, Hyde and Regent's Parks, a stroll through Chancery lane and Lincoln's Inn Fields, so familiar to all readers of English by Charles Dickens.

what he writes. What an extraormore the sovereigns were crowned and are crowned at the present day. In its numerous chapels, built and enriched by the generosity of Englands kings of yore, lay the mortal remains of many sovereigns, princes, bishops and saints. The writer cannot commit to paper any expression of the thoughts which a visit to this wonderful pile aroused in his bosom. In the pdet's corner can be seen the marble busts and the tombs of most of those who woode the muses since the time of Chaucer. In one of the chapels is buried the writer was walking along in the vicinity of Westminster, and all at once met the Cardinal walking to wards his residence. He wore a black sack coat, knee breeches and gaiters, and a broad brimmed silk

The city is one or sutention, that it is necessary for a transient visitor to make out his programme at once, otherwise he will find that time will flay very rapidly, and he will have seen nothing in particular. Every-one who has ever heard of London hows it is a large place, but, perhaps one who has ever heard of London hows it is a large place, but, perhaps one who has ever heard of London hows it is a large place, but, perhaps, some of your readers may form a better idea of its size, when they consider that it contains a greater unaber of people than the whole of treet. Wordsworth's poems.

"Oh, my friends, remember my poems; they lear the impress of my very soul."

Such is the secret of poetry. There are of the great connecting what he writes. What an extraordinary, I might say, impossible view, more the sovereigns were crowned and the poeple are a straordinary, I might say, impossible view, it is nothing new that the poet to all readers of the collection of Words which he has more abundantly provided, may not prove unsatisfactory. There are, indeed, a vast number of sonnets among our poet's works. They are all written with wonderful ease, variety of pause and cadence, gracefulness and freedom, in which, with reference to that character of composition. Wordsworth is clearly beyond all rivalry.
