It was said the British seamen would be taken to the Marie and the Marie is now owned by St. Pierre ship operators.

600 BIRTHDAY HONOURS.
LONDON, June 3. The list of honors for the King's birthday contains about six hundred names and is almost entirely of domestic interest.

KING'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATED.

LONDON, June 3. King George celebrated his 60th birthday to-day. The Court came to London from Windsor yesterday for the occasion which was marked by the customary congratulations from relatives, friends and foreign rulers and eulogistic articles in the newspapers. The chief public celebration in London centered around the old military ceremonial of trooping the colors, and the annual parade and evolutions by a brigade of Guards in St. James' Court. The spectacle always drew crowds, but they were larger than ever this year having an added special attraction in the presence of Marshal Foch, who came here at the King's invitation to participate in the parade. The Generalissimo rode with the Duke of York, Prince Henry, the Duke of Connaught and Viscount Lascelles beside the King at the head of the parade from the Palace to the review grounds and back.

MARIE II RECAPTURED.

ST. PIERRE, Mig., June 3. The French run schooner Marie II, which was seized here yesterday by six British sentries, was recaptured at midnight by the French trawler Aisne after a battle and is being towed toward St. Pierre. A brief message to find children born with chests that were too long and too narrow. They could not naturally expand their chests and were forced to breathe imperfectly with an over-use of the diaphragm. The result was that they could not aerate their lungs adequately, they grew feebly, and consequently the muscles of the abdomen became lax.

The wall of the abdomen protruded, its organs drooped, and later in life there was found another of those too familiar figures of people with rather shallow frames who never seemed to be able to stand upright and whose stomachs were distinctive by their "bow-window" pattern.

These people were really seriously handicapped; their power of breathing was not good, their range of activity was limited, they became fatigued easily, and were subject to catarrhs and other impediments of health.

There was no reason why this evil could not to a large extent be remedied. It taken in hand early in life, these people could have their chests made functionally efficient, they could be made to breathe correctly, and most of the afflictions of their adult life could be prevented.

It was curious, Lord Dawson commented, that although the men and women of to-day, particularly women, were superior to their forebears in respect to the strength of their muscles, the tautness of their figures, and independence of artificial support, there had not been a corresponding improvement in posture, and that the majority of the population continued to walk with their shoulders forward instead of square. This defect still marred the perfection of beauty in our people.

Marvellous Memories

Among the various kinds of memory which have been recorded from time to time, the achievement of a member of the staff of the Prussian State Library deserves a special niche. He has specialized in weather reports, and claims to remember exactly what sort of time we had on any day that can be mentioned between 1881 and the present year. Name the day, and he will tell you all about it—he will even give you the official thermometer and barometer readings.

His claims have been tested by the Meteorological Society of Berlin, and according to reports, that body has been quite unable to "catch him out." Memory, of course, is largely a matter of training; and some marvellous demonstrations of the extent to which it can be cultivated have been given from time to time.

Dates, for instance, would put a date—and the correct date—to any event you liked to name; while another cultivator of the same branch of knowledge, a stoker, memorized the whole of Haydn's "Dictionary of Dates."

One of the pioneers of steep-chasing, Colonel Charriade, had also this amazing knack. He once memorized the day's issue of a newspaper, advertisements included, for a wager. After these feats, the ability enjoyed by Macaulay and Lord Randolph Churchill, to repeat a page of print after a single reading seems a small thing.

'No Safety Left on Earth'

'Nowhere in this world of ours is there any sanctuary now; neither in the air above, nor in the waters beneath, nor on the surface of the solid land; the science of slaughter is over them all, and has brought women and children into the battle-zone. Death and destruction will know no master, and armed force may be our only hope. Therefore this toast becomes almost a prayer.'—Sir Frank Dicksee, President of the Royal Academy, when proposing the toast of "The Imperial Services."
