tion was taken up clause by clause and discussed. A motion was passed

That we, the members of the Dominion Grange now in session, consider that the grain tester, as it is used at present, is detrimental to our interest, and we take this opportunity of saying we do not not want it. Also that we recommend that no change be made in the present tariff on flour. Also that binding twine be placed upon the free list.

The committee's report on combines and monopolies was fully discussed and the following motion passed:

That we would take this occasion to commend the action taken by Mr. Wallace, M.P., in his efforts to provide legislation against combines, and express a hope that he may persevere until he secures such measures as will free our country from the curse of combines, and we recommend the Executive Committee to bring the above before the Government at Ottawa.

"the planet has a faint moonlike ray." Enormous sums have been given for pearls in all ages, because they were so beloved. Cleopatra would have swallowed a diamond had not a pearl been costlier, arch snobbess as she was! and the "pearl of great price" has been a synonym for the most precious possession from time immemorial. A whole fleet of boats is kept up to visit the pearl oanks in the oriental seas, and the banks nave to be guarded and kent in order by the possession from time immemorial. A whole fleet of boats is kept up to visit the pearl canks in the oriental seas, and the banks nave to be guarded and kept in order by the company between "the seasons." The diver who fetches up the parent mollusk has no easy time. He is highly trained to his work, and works hard, diving with his life in his hand; for sharks abound in the pearl seas. Forty to fifty plunges a day are very common, five diving at a time relieved by five more, who can retain their breath for several minutes—the average is one minute and a half—and bring up 100 oysters at each plunge. The boats, when full, must be completely unloaded before nightfall; if not, the dead oyster might open and drop pearls before it was stacked. Then comes the stacking in pits, as high as a room's wall sometimes—and glad am I that I do not live to windward of an oyster stack! The stacks are sold by auction, the buyer taking his chance whether any pearls are in the oysters he so buys. He may spend his all upon a stack and not get a single pearl. He may find a "pearl of great price" and recoup all former losses.

When found the pearl has to be polished with pearl dust, a process which does not injure the opalescent surface derived from the decay of the fish. It is drilled by the blacks and strung with others with great dispatch and skill. The pearls are next sorted, those clearest in color and roundest in shape being preferred. Then they come to be set, and the setter is paid one stilling per pearl for his work. The largest sum known to have been given for a single pearl is said to have been given for a single pearl is said to have been paid by Tavernier at Catifa, in Arabia. It was oval, spotless, two inches long, and its price was £110,000. A very fine British pearl that has found a resting place in the crown of England came from the Conway.—Cor. Gentleman's Magazine.

The coffee berry contains two grains. The ripe berry resembles a large red haw. A pulp covers the coffee grains, and this substance has a pleasant, sweet taste.

Men, women and children can pick coffee, and thus employment can be given to the entire family on a coffee plantation. The berries are placed in large baskets and then in carts, usually drawn by oxen, and transported to the paved yard, or inclosure, where they are spread to cure by the sun.

The old fashioned way was to remove the outer pulp, when dry, by rude machinery, and then to break the thin, tough membrane-like skin which holds the two grains together and then to break the thin, tough membrane-like skin which holds the two grains together by a pounding process. The coffee was then thrown into the air by negresses, after the manner of the old time winnowing of cereals. The large coffee plantations have improved machinery and methods of drying, decorti-cating and cleaning coffee, but there is still great room for improperation. as follows:

That we take great pleasure in congratulating the officers and members of Dominion Grange on the unanimous kindly feeling now existing within the order of Patrons of Husbandry in the Dominion of Canada, as no claims or grievances have been laid before us.

WOMEN OF BRAINS.

Need Any Ambitious Woman Despair of Her Own Success?

HARRIET HUBBARD AYER.
[Copied from New York Press.]

Mrs. Harriet Hubbard Ayer is the youngest child of the late Henry G. Hubbard, one of Chicago's oldest and most distinguished citizens. As a child she was extremely delicate, but so bright that at the age of 4 she could read as well as most children at 10. At 15 she graduated at the head of her class from the Convent of the Sacred Heart, in Chicago. At 16 she became the wife of Mr. Herbert C. Ayer, a then wealthy iron merchant of Chicago and Youngstown, Chio.

Society knew Mrs. Ayer as a leader because of her wealth, her beauty, ability and hospitality. Her intimate friends knew her as a loving mother and noble woman. The poor as their friend, not in words alone, but always in deeds of kindness. HARRIET HUBBARD AYER.

HARRIET HUBBARD AYER. HARRIET HUBBARD AYER.

She was then, as now, a person of the best impulses, and generous to a fault. The most remarkable thing, however, in the history of this interesting woman is that, although born and raised in luxury, she met disaster bravely and unflinchingly when it came, thinking, as usual, more about the welfare of others than her own comfort and concern.

came, thinking, as usual, more came, thinking, as usual, more welfare of others than her own comfort and concern.

Mrs. Ayer is a woman whose history would read as far more improbable than the wildest fiction ever written, and of whom, in recounting the sad story of her life—and how in a few hours she found herself instead of rich in millions, absolutely destitute, with two little daughters to support—the New York Herald said, "She is a woman whom any country may be proud to call her daughter." To-day Mrs. Harifiet Hubbard Ayer's name in the business world is a tower of strength. She has gained the confidence and respect of every business house with which she has had dealings. It has been her motto to always tell the truth. Her advertisements, which the whole country have read, are plain and truthful statements. The result of such a policy is this: Mrs. Ayer is the head of a great and prosperous business, founded by her, and to-day by her guided and directed in all its departments.

One day, in Paris, Mrs. Ayer, while suffering intensely from the scorching sun of a July journey across the English Channel, was offered a pot of cream by an old French lady friend, to be used on her face when retiring, being assured that it would do wonders in softening and beautifying the complexion. Its effects were so magical and so marvelous that Mrs. Ayer became anxious to possess the formula for the cream,
which she learned was not an article to be bought, but the old French lady finally sold the recipe, which (so she told Mrs. Ayer) was the one used by her beautiful and famous ancester, Julie Recamier for 40 years, and was the undoubted secret of her wonderful beauty, which Mme. Recamier retained until her death.
