Mr. Smith Combats the Position Taken should then be obliged to get our by the Retail Grocers' Association. To the Editor of The Advertiser: At the recent meeting of the Retail

Grocers' Association some of the arguments used against the idea of establishing a fruit market were, to say the least, a little far-fetched. Apparently the grocers are trying to persuade themselves that if we had no fruit trade all hands would be better off; but, I take it, our market was not intended to be run solely in the interests of the Retail Grocers' Association, but in the interest of the general public, and it is the wishes and desires of our citizens, and not those of some halfdozen grocers that should be paramount with the council. At the meeting above referred to a statement was made that if the bazar was converted into a fruit market it would again be used for huckstering. This seems to me rather an unfortunate remark. A year ago the bazar was a prosperous business place, paying the city some $1,500 yearly in rentals; now it is nothing but a large stable, used by the grocers to put their horses in when they are down town. This might suit them, but it is not an improvement to the market or the pocket of the tax-

It was also said that "the feeling of the growers (or did they mean gro-cers?) was that the market was for the producer to dispose of his products to the citizens, and that no commission business be allowed." Very considerate of the grower, very. But the con-cluding paragraph of this statement— "no commission business to be allowed" -gives it away. The other portion is merely an attempt to throw dust in the eyes of the council. The local grower has certainly some objections to the handling of fruit by a commission house; but what objections our citizens have to this is a different matter. If we had to depend upon the local grower for our supply of native fruits, the majority of us pharmacy.

LONDON'S FRUIT TRADE | would get but little fruit, and what we did get we should pay pretty dearly for. If this idea was carried out we berries and wine grapes on the market from the grower, and as for our peaches, plums, table grapes, etc., we must either go without or purchase them from the grocer. This state of affairs, however desirable from their point of view, does not look quite so roseate to the purchaser, who would not be content to go back to the old days and pay $1 to $1 25 for a basket of peaches. The fruit business is a distinct and rapidly growing one, and can be no more considered a side line of a grocery than can the drygoods and boot and shoe trades. If we were to force the commission dealer off our markets, we should deal a death-blow to the fruit trade, and be obliged to pay twice the price for fruit that we do now. The commission man is the agent of the grower, and it is through this class of dealers that our citizens and the farmers in our neighborhood now enjoy a plentiful supply of one of the most healthful gifts. Restrict this trade and you commit one of the greatest errors our council could be guilty of, and one that will not soon be forgotten by the electors. As I stated in my letter to The Advertiser of the 13th, it is encouragement and not restriction this trade wants and deserves, and I would say to our council, Do not be swayed too much by a few dealers to whose interest it might be to ruin the fruit trade, and to adopt in connection with this trade some of the ideas to be found in other wide-awake and up-todate cities. Respectfully, ARTHUR SMITH. London, June 18, 1898.
