Everybody had been pleasantly anticipating the lawn party and ball that were to follow, and it would, of course, be a disappointment to have them given up; at the same time everyone felt that it would be the proper thing to do if Ray should continue to be very ill.

"I overheard Lady Wallace say that unless there was marked improvement in his condition by tomorrow morning, they would be obliged to cancel their invitations for Tuesday evening," Mary Montcalm remarked, in reply to a question bearing upon this subject.

"How exceedingly annoying!" muttered Miss Lovering, with an impatient shrug of her shoulders; but no one appeared to heed the unfeeling observation.

"I am sure that Cousin Neil must be nearly distracted with anxiety, and I, for one, think it would be wise if he would give it up," said Ernestine Wallace, with grave consideration.

"I agree with you," Miss Alice Montcalm returned, "I am sure I could not enjoy mysel' if I thought that my pleasure was being purchased at the expense of his feelings or of the comfort of his child."

A number of others expressed themselves of the same mind, and would willingly have forfeited all plans for their pleasure rather than add a single care to the already overburdened heart of their kind and genial host. Of course the fillness of his little son could not fail to throw a damper upon the spirit of his guests, and the evening was rather a sad one to all; while the company retired to their rooms at an early hour, suspending their usual sociability out of regard for the family, and a great calm again settled over livihurst.

Helen Montcaim faithfully performed her mission, and, after the second powder had been administered, she had the satisfaction of seeing Shirley drop off into a sweet and refreshing sleep, whereupon she stole softly away to make her promised report to Lord Wallace, who was waiting for it in the library.

He looked much relieved upon receiving the good news, and after thanking her for her kindness, he went away to Ray's room to await the coming of the skillful surgeon from Montreal for whom he had telegraphed.

surgeon from Montreal for whom he had telegraphed.

The distinguished gentleman arrived by the late evening express, and the two men spent the night together, watching the frail fittle patient, whose life had so nearly been extinguished by that frightful disease, membraneous croup.

"He could not have lived another hour if you had neglected this only means of relief—this one chance for his life," he remarked to Lord Wallace, after he had made his examination of the child; and then he complimented the young physician in the highest terms upon the skillful manner in which he had performed the delicate and difficult operation.

"You think, then, that it was 'the one chance' for his life—that he will weather it?" Neil asked, with an anxious look on his careworn face.

"I think so—I hope so," Dr. Wain-wright replied. "The only question, as of course you know, is whether he will have strength to throw off the membrane, and he seems like a fairly well-nourished child."

"Yes." Neil answered, "aside from his infirmity, he has always been very well, though never strong."
The boy was much better when morning broke, while the two physicians thought that nearly, if not quite, the whole of the membrane had been expelled, and unless new complications arose he would seen new complications arose new complications arose he would soon recover from the attack.

Dr. Wainwright said that he should feel perfectly safe in leaving him in the hands of his father, who had shown himself so competent and possessed of such sound judgment.

"It is a great pity that you are a rich man," he smilingly remarked, as he was taking his leave of him, "for I feel sure that you would shine as a bright and luminous light if you could but give yourself up to your profession."

Neil thanked him for his complimentary opinion; then the two men shook each other cordially by the hand and separat-Thus, with his mind relieved of a heavy burden. faction, as he glanced around the eager, sympathetic faces about him:

"I am heartily glad to be able to tell you that there will have to be no change in our plans for today and tomorrow; and I hope that you will all make the most of what has been arranged for you. The nursery is so remote from the main portion of the house that Ray cannot possibly be disturbed by what is going on here, and the preparations for the hop on Tuesday evening will go on as previously arranged."

"But, Neil," said his uncle, regarding him with some anxiety, "you are looking nearly worn out with watching and care, and surely cannot have much heart for such gayeties. I do not need to tell you that we would all gladly forego the pleasures you have planned for us, rather than have you overtaxed or troubled."

"Thank you, Uncle Charles," the young host gratefully responded, "your suggestion is certainly very thoughtful and considerate; but the only favor that I will ask of you all to excuse me for the remainder of the day, while I try to make up the rest which I have lost, and no doubt I shall be quite myself again by tomorrow."

make up the rest which I have lost, and no doubt I shall be quite myself again by tomorrow."

Everybody readily voted him as excused, and urged him to feel no anxiety upon their account; and, as soon as lunch was over, he retired to his own room to get the rest he so much needed, for the strain upon him, both mentally and physically, had been very great during the last twenty-four hours.

When Shirley awoke that morning she felt much refreshed by her long night of unbroken repose.

She arose at her usual hour, but did not feel equal to joining the guests at breakfast, for Madame Marton was not able to rise, neither did she appear to be in any better frame of mind than upon the previous day; and the unaccountable change in her manner both puzzled and distressed Shirley to such an extent that she had no heart to mingle with the company below.

Madame was as yet ignorant of the active part which Shirley had taken in the exciting events of the previous day.

As we know, she was not awake when she returned.

She woke a little later, but Shirley thought it best not to excite her by telling her how sick Ray still was, or of the critical operation which his father had performed, with her as his helper.

Breakfast had been over nearly an hour, and Shirley was just putting the finishing touches to her toilet, after having assisted madame in the arduous task of rising and dressing, for she refused to remain in bed, in spite of the fact that she was still too ill to make the effort, when there came a gentle tap upon the door.

Opening it, Shirley found one of the servants standing outside, and bearing in Shirley's face glowed with delight at the sight of the exquisite offering.

"Water-lilies and lilies of the valley, both blooming at once!" she exclaimed, as she received the lovely gift and turned to deposit it upon her table. "Ah! but almost anything is possible in these days of science and conservatories."
She unfolded the note and read the following words:

Southern People Moving to Curtail the Negro Vote in the United States.

New York, May 22.-Ex-Judge Augustus Van Wyck presided last night at the annual dinner of the North Carolina Society in the Waldorf, Gov. C. B. Aycock, of North Carolina, and ex-Gov. Hugh P. Thompson, of South Carolina, were present. It was the anniversary of the date on which the 'Mecklenburg Declaration of pendence" was drafted in North Carolina before the national declaration declaration was agreed on in Philadelphia. Aycock spoke of new conditions in the south and the duties of the south ern people toward the negro race. He explained the purpose of the constitutional amendment of 1900, which bases suffrage on intelligence. He said: "Our amendment is not aimed at the negro as an individual. It is mass voting we seek to destroy.'

The Guelph Mercury says of the game between the London and Maple Leafs here on Saturday: "The Guelph team was outpitched, outbatted and outbased. In fielding the teams were more equally matched, but even there London had none the worst of it. After that fatal third inning the Guelph batters forgot their cunning, and their fielding was poor enough, too. In the fielding the work of the trio of Maple Leafs in the outgarden was excellent. Six balls, and long ones, too, went to the outfield, and all, save one, were hard ones, but on every occasion the Guelph men got them. One catch made by Spires was the cleanest act of the day. Besides this they had a bit of pursuit work, and many hits made by London men looked like homers and would have been but for the sharp fielding and quick re-turns of McGunnigle, Spires and The good work of McGunnigle was marred by his poor batting.

MILNER MAY GET A PEERAGE.

King Edward Said To Be Saving One for Him.

Archbishop of Canterbury Says the Country Has Had Enough Unmarried Ministers—Italy Has a Dispute With Turkey.

London, May 22.-Dealing with rumors about the near approach of Alfred Milner to English shores, the gossips alternately raise him to the peerage, and supersede him as high commissioner in South Africa. Some more imaginative marplots even persist in ejecting Chamberlain from the colonial office, and substituting Milner for him All these rumors are idle tales. Alfred Milner cannot be allowed to return to England for a conference with Mr. Chamberlain without demonstration of royal appreciation and public approval. He is not likely to return from Marlborough House without a decoration of some kind and the peerage will be a natural reward for services which have been more arduous than those of any predecessor. CLERGY ASKED TO MARRY. London, May 22.-The Archbishop of Canterbury would like to see all the clergy of the Church of England married. Preaching in the Hampstead parish church, in aid of the Queen Victoria fund, he remarked that the experience with an unmarried ministry lasted in this country enough to make people generally dis like it. They preferred a married clergy, for a clergyman's family often did as much good as he did. The pub-Pitcher John Sullivan, of Berlin, a lic must, however, be prepared to pay brother of George Sullivan, signed by more for a married than for an unmarried ministry.

In enforcing the insufficiency if many clerical incomes, the primate declared the poverty of the clergy not only rendered the proper performance of their duty impossible at times, but also prevented many men from entering the ministry, because of the poor prospect afforded by the profession.

key party." Ahmid Tewfik Pasha, Ottoman minister of foreign affairs, having renewed his assurances of Turkey's intention to apologize to the embassies for the recent violations of the foreign mail bags, the British, French and Austro-Hungarian ambassadors have ac-knowledged them in an identical note, and the postal difficulty is now regarded as adjusted.

CONSCRIPTION FOR BRITISH ARMY.

An ominous statement on the question of conscription was made by Lord Raglan, the under secretary for war, last night, says the New York Tribune's London correspondent. Speaking at the United Service Club, he said that Englishmen must not be frightened at the idea of conscription. There were only two ways of getting men for the army: They could pay them, and make their lot comfortable, or they could press them, and paying them had already been declared impracticable. In this connection it is interesting to note that the militia had just been put into operation in Guernsey to strength en the local militia. Guernsey is the only portion of the British Empire where conscription is in force.

LAKE ERIE'S WATER LOWER THAN EVER

Chief Engineer Lieut.-Col. Anderson Thinks Remedial Measures Necessary.

Anderson, chief engineer of the marine de-partment, who has just returned from CURES tour of inspection on the upper lakes reports that the water in Lake Erie is lower than was ever known to be the case before. This is due to a series of dry seasons, the drain made by the power development works at Niagara, and the fact that dredging in Tona wanda Canal has made it easier fo water to escape from the lake. Anderson thinks it is imperative upon the United States authorities to adop some remedial measures at an early date, otherwise the lowness of the way ter will offer a serious obstacle to nav-igation. A LIFE SAVED.—Mr. James Bryson, Cameron, writes: "I was confined to my bed with inflammation of the lungs, and was given up by the physicians. A neighbor advised me to try Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, stating that his wife had used it for a throat trouble with the best results. Acting on his advice, I procured the medicine, and less than half a bottle cured me; I certainly believe it saved my life.
