The whole tenor of the agreement between the parties is for partition and not for sale.

That consideration, however, desmot apply to the Castlegar property. As to that, it is only touched by the clause in what I may call the main agreement. As I have said, schedule C does not apply to the Castlegar property as to that is held simply upon a bare trust by the company. As to non-half, they are beneficial owners, and as to the other half they hold as trustees for Heinze. As to that, I think he is entitled to the benefit of the statute, and the Castlegar property will have to be sold.

The judgment of the court then will be, first, as to both the land grand and the Castlegar property, that there shall be a reference to the registrar to reports as to what lands have been sold, and what sum is due to the defendant in respect to those sales, after making all just allowances.
