In the dry phraseology of their description there is little that touches the heart, but among the royal witnesses who were constantly with the Czar, and who watched the slow ebbing away of his life, was a Queen who each evening returning to her apartments in the Chateau of Livadia, wrote down a record of the day's sorrows and sufferings. She was Queen Olga of Greece, the sister-in-law and cousin of the Emperor.

Her description, taken from The Figaro, is as follows:
