OUR ONLY REFUGE.

With guilt and shame opprest, Where shall I turn for rest? Where look for timely succour from despair? I try the world in vain, I court Earth's flattering train, But find, alas! no hope, no consolation, there.

JAMES DAVIES, OF DEVAUDEN.

It is grievous to think how much good energy is wasted for want of due discretion to manage it; how much zeal there is which is not according to knowledge. Nay, further, it cannot be doubted that many well-meaning persons are betrayed, from ignorance, into courses of conduct which are offensive to God.

James Davies was born in 1765. At the age of thirteen he was left, by the death of his father, with a respectable farm in Northamptonshire, with no worldly means, and with but a delicate constitution. The occupation which he chose was that of a pedlar; other thoughts, however, were in his mind.

HOW ST. PAUL BROUGHT HIS BODY INTO SUBJECTION. It is plain that the apostle left his body under, and brought it into subjection, by fasting and abstinence, as the Fathers frequently observe; for as those corporal establishments by whipping and scourging of themselves, so commonly and ridiculously used by the papists in their solemn processions, St. Paul never makes any mention of them.

This pretence will serve almost all men, and that almost at all times, to break loose; so that no fast held can be taken of any in church. If the rule be, to break off from others, and still to unite with that teacher by whom he edifies most, the next question is, "Who shall judge that it is?" and that must be every man for himself, for every man seems best able to tell his own gains by what he finds, and one is not a fit judge of another's profit.

No human joy, however, is without its interruptions. The hateful spirit of schism seems not to let the good man depart in peace. Dissent, which in the time of his destitution left Devauden to his fate, is now seeking to sow discord among this happy flock.

The Garner.

We rejoice at present, and we rejoice with reason, in the prevalence of a higher tone of moral feeling than was ever known among Heathen nations. We rejoice in seeing many of the evils of life alleviated; many of those abominations, which the face of society was disgraced, removed. But what, we may ask, is it that has made us to differ in these respects? What has raised us above those whom we still regard as our guides in the world of intellect, as our models in political wisdom, and our masters in works of art?

It is to the influence of the Scriptures. We rejoice at present, and we rejoice with reason, in the prevalence of a higher tone of moral feeling than was ever known among Heathen nations. We rejoice in seeing many of the evils of life alleviated; many of those abominations, which the face of society was disgraced, removed.

best means of private edification, every good man must stop in peaceable ways, which are the best ways that are innocent; and the ways that are best too, all things considered; and the benefit of peace being cast into the scales, though some others should happen to be better when considered abstractly in themselves. And therefore no conscientious or wise man must ever attempt to procure a means more edifying to himself by separation. From this it may plainly appear how unwarrantably our Dissenting brethren act in separating from us, when they confess to be a sound and lawful Church, upon preface that they can edify more in separate meetings.—Rev. John Ketchell.
