

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have thrilled thousands of people around the world with their equestrian skill in the Musical Ride, but the Force doesn't rely on the horse or the dog to get its man today. Snowmobiles and helicopters, or computers and spectral analysis are more often the best friend of the federal law officer. In 1973, the R.C.M. Police celebrates its centennial, having grown in that period from a horse-mounted quasi-military peace force of 150 men to a multifaceted federal police agency of more than 10,000 men respected and admired around the world.
