When the first Europeans stepped ashore the land seemed almost empty. They soon found it was not. In the splendidly illustrated page from a book on the native nations, the French author depicts the coats of arms for the Outchipoves, the Nadovessis (appelés Scioux), the Puants, the Hurons, the Illinois and the Oumamis. The manuscript in the centre is a treaty between the British Government and the Indians, signed by the Chiefs of more than a score of tribes. The Indians also gave Queen Victoria a look at lacrosse. The Iroquois players were listed on the poster at left by their translated names: Hickory Wood Split, Pick the Feather and Outside the Multitude, for example.
