QUALITY in men and
clothes is the thing that commands respect for both. It is a combination of so many kinds of goodness that none can properly define it.

Yet it is as easily recognized as an old friend, and is as gladly met. You cannot say you see quality in clothes —you experience it. When this experience is repeated in one store you accept the label of that store as the certain sign of quality—until you are some day disappointed. If that day never comes, the label stands in your mind as a shorthand symbol of excellence.
