government to pass any radical federal law on the subject of prohibition.

To Kill Margarine.

But if the senate would throw out a bone-dry prohibition bill, the house would with even greater celerity defeat any legislation designed to permantly legalize the manufacture, sale and importation of eleomargarine.

To get out of this awkward corner. Hon. Arthur Meighen has introduced a bill which reads as follows: a bill which reads as follows:

All orders and regulations of the sovernor - in - council heretofore passed under the authority of the war measures act, 1914, shall continue in force, notwithstanding that war no longer exists or may exist, until the end of the present session of the parliament of Canada; subject, however, to the authority of the governor-in-council at any time to rescind or repeal in whole or in part any of the said orders or regulations.

But will this bill get thru parlialiament before the peace trenty is signed? The Liberals will hold it up in the house, because they cannot assent to blanket legislation legalizing all the orders-in-council against which they have inveighed. Even government supporters will demand a list of the orders-in-council that are thus to be validated, and many of them will object to this holus bolus validation. Even tho the nouse passed Mr. Meighen's bill it would probably be rejected by the senate, or so hadly disfigured by amendments as to be unrecognizable. Racing may be resumed and whiskey shipped into Ontario from Quebec before parliament reaches Meighen's bill.
