Veteran of Crimenn War and Hero of Some Queer

Kingston, March 22 .- At the House

who have interesting careers and can tell many pleasing stories. Some of them are veterans of many battles in the Crimean war, while others have plowed the deep in England's ships of war, and have been in many ports. Among the old salts is Patrick Mc-Guirk, who was born at Sandy Row, Belfast, Ireland, sixty-one years ago. Barring that he suffers from frost bite, which he says he got while wrecked off the banks of Newfoundland years ago, the old man is in good health. During his life, the veteran sailor sailed in tropical climes. South America and Mexico seemed to be "Paddy's" favorite stamping grounds. At the age of 16 years he joined H.M.S. Britannia and set out for an ocean voyage. The boat went on a three years' cruise, and among the places the ancient mariner remembered was Cailao. Peru, in South America. The Britannia was in couple of sea fights. She was a ree-decker, carried a cloud of sail and

In Southern Waters After leaving the navy, the old sailor shipped on the Moonlight, a clipper built merchantman, at Liverpool, and sailed to Vera Cruz, Mexico. According to Patrick, that port was one of the layored spots on the earth, where milk and honey were in abundance. There was tropical fruit for the millions. Oysters as big as one's hand were plent.
