Indeed, many of John Dryden's friends affirm to-day that had it not been for his outside interests, his public usefulness would not have ended with the good work he did for Ontario. To assume the wide and always broadening duties of this notable department fell to the lot of Samuel Nelson Monteith, B.S.A., member for the constituency of South Perth, a county favorably known as the home of thrifty but progressive farmers. Of Irish parentage, but brought up on the fertile soil of western Ontario and educated in its schools-possessed, too, of an extensive experience gained thru the honest and painstaking occupation of various positions of trust in York Township and County, Mr. Monteith brought to the agricultural department a receptive mind, proven ability and integrity, and an alert and thoro appreciation of the needs of Ontario's rural population. Too firm in character and temper to be stampeded by either friends or foes, and, like the master general, carefully reconnoitring the ground before advancing into new territory. The Mistake of the Big Steak

By HERBERT KAUFMAN.

Watch out for waste in circulation. Find out where your story is going to be read. Don't pay for planting the seed of publicity in a spot where you are not going to harvest the results

The manufacturer of soap who has his goods on sale from Oskaloosa to Timbucto doesn't care how widely a newspaper circulation is scattered. Whoever reads about his product is near to some store or other where it is sold-but you have just one store and it is in Chicago.

Buying advertising circulation is very much like ordering a steakif the waiter brings you a porterhouse twice as big as your digestion will take care of, you've paid twice as much as the steak was worth to you, even if it is worth the price to the restaurant man.

It is not the amount of circulation that your advertisement gets. but the amount of circulation that gets people to buy.

If two newspapers offer you their columns and one shows a distribution almost entirely within the City of Chicago and in towns that rely upon Chicago for buying facilities, your business can digest all of its influence. If the other has as much circulation, but only one-third of it is in Chicago territory, the bulk of copies cannot establish its value to you—it's another case of the big steak—you pay for more than you can digest. That part of its influence which is concentrated where men and women can't get your goods after you get their attention is sheer

By dividing the number of copies he prints into his line rate, a publisher may fallaciously demonstrate to you that his space is sold as low as that of his stronger competitors, but if half his circulation is too far away to bring buyers, his real rate is double what it seems. • He is like the butcher who weighs in all the bone and sinew and fat and charges you as much for the waste as he does for the meat.
