From the London Colonial Gazette, Oct. 14. The Gazette of Friday night contains official despatches from Admiral Stopford respecting the operations of the fleet and troops on the coast of Syria.

The despatches are more remarkable for the absence of information than for any additional light which they throw upon the affair. In one point, however, there is a substantial difference from the previous accounts; it relates to the communications that passed between the naval commanders and Soliman Pasha.

The despatches are represented to have been sent to answer to a demand to withdraw his forces from Beyrout, beyond a request that the communication might be made in French as he was unacquainted with the English language.

"Djornie is a good-sized bay, with a promontory projecting considerably into the sea. A road from Beyrout runs along the shore, and is practicable for infantry, artillery, and cavalry; this road the Rance covered. The road from Tripoli leads also along-shore, and the Waap and Phoenix covered a gorge over which it was necessary to pass.

Although preparations for war continue to be made in France with unabated activity, the latest news of the French Government appear to be decidedly less hostile. Another Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday, for the purpose of discussing the question, and the discussion was adjourned to the following day, at a meeting of the Cabinet at M. Thiers's house, when a note, making strong representations to the Four Powers, was agreed in order.

The note was received in London on Friday. The Constitution describes it as insisting on three points:—That the Pasha should be removed from Egypt; that, during hostilities, the allied squadron should be interdicted from burning the Turkish and Egyptian harbours in the harbour of Alexandria.

"It is obvious that the same terms cannot now be obtained for Mehemet Ali which might have been obtained when he was in the hands of the British.

At a meeting of the Council on Tuesday, it was agreed that the Chambers should be convened for the 20th; and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. Drouin de Lohville, has been appointed to demand from the Sultan the withdrawal of his troops from the coast of Syria.

M. Thiers has addressed a long note to the French Ambassador in London, in reply to Lord Palmerston's note of the 20th of August. Lord Palmerston retraced the history of negotiations between France and England on the Eastern question, for the purpose of showing that France had always been in alliance with the Four Powers, not that they had abandoned her.

The Revenue accounts have been published, for the year and quarters ending 10th October 1859 and 1840. They do not show much for the result of the increased taxation.
