AFTER MUSHROOMS.

Now Is the Time For the Little Fellows To Show Up.

Mushroom time is at hand again and all over the broad Dominion the young and the grown-up are keeping an eye in likely places for the succulent dainty.

Perhaps the best known of all the varieties is the meadow mushroom, whence is derived the spawn from which the ordinary commercial article is grown. Very partial to pasture fields, particularly where sheep run, there are several places near the city where its white cap and pink gills attract the gatherer. None of the bad growths can be mistaken for it. The gills turn a brown, later a black, before decay.

How could anybody mistake this second variety? The morel is pale buff in color, it is deeply honeycombed and pitted, and its stem is partly hollow. In Queen's Park or Trinity College Grounds, in High Park, Toronto, or down at the Riverdale, even in Clarence Square, it is indigenous to a great many of our city breathing spaces—this Morchella Esculenta—and a diligent ambulator may gather him by the big basketful, so prolific is the crop, any time from the season's opening till late on in November. Hunt for morels wherever you see a patch of filled land. Many is the big, tasty mess come from the city water-side dumps, even, and they say that an enthusiast has named a near morel a—haunter of the earth backing to the sea-wall—after a one-time controller. Nothing will bring out the morels like the warm, damp nights to be looked for during September.

Pronounced by epicures the choicest of all mushrooms, the third of our local grass-fleshes, is termed by the learned, the Agaricus Procerus. Anyone will enjoy swallowing a toothsome dish of these, rather than the name. Once again if is not understandable how an amateur, the veriest tyro, can mistake this variety for any detested toadstool ever trod under foot. Like the last, it is a buff color, but spotted with dark shaggy patches, and to secure the parasol mushrooms frequent any place where cattle pasture or horses graze, or seek the margins of woods.

You do not need to take my word for it. "Wherever," says an authority, "an agaric on a long stalk, enlarged at the base, presents a dry cuticle, more or less scaly, a darker colored umbonated top, a moveable ring on the stalk, and white gills, it must be the agaricus procerus, and it may be gathered and eaten without fear."

A pocketful, or a peck, you will like the tender succulence of the shaggy-maned variety—Coprinus comatus—common all over, and a delicious, nutritious dainty of the fields. Yet once more, no poisonous kind looks like it—in shape of a closed umbrella, of a downy whiteness, beautifully spotted with brown. Beneath it is a delicate pink when young, but speedily turns black and dissolves into an inky substance, leaving but the bare stalk standing. You can often have them as late as December.

Remindful of a "swell" dinner, that name—he's the fairy-ring mushroom, and may be growing in the coming fortnight right outside your window, unbeknown, unless you acquaint yourself with the buff-colored, leathery-looking fungus, growing in crescent-shaped patches, or sometimes forming irregular rings. The full, soft masses may be picked and strung, it is said, and retain their piquant flavor for years.

Slow and sure now, gleaner of the wood-lots! The false fairy ring differs from the true in the gills and in the lines under the cap—where they are crowded close together, and not wide apart as in the true food. The false kind has a depressed cap, the true has it always mounded. Also, if it's taste is acrid and not sweet and agreeable, reject it.—C.M.C., in Toronto Star Weekly.

A Delver In Figures.

A book has just been printed at Lindsay, prepared by the town auditor, H. J. Lytle, that represents many months, or even years, of tedious, exacting labor. The copy contained over two hundred thousand calculations, only one-half, however, being used in the published work. It is somewhat difficult for one not versed in municipal lore to understand the magnitude of the work, but an idea can be formed from the fact that any rates levied by a council which can be expressed by one or any possible combinations of two or three figures, on amounts from $100, increasing by sums of $100 until $9,900 is reached, are to be found on its pages, or, in other words, every rate from one mill to nine and ninety-nine-hundredth mills is furnished. In order to make the work as nearly perfect as possible after reading the proofs with the copy, Mr. Lytle again proved the calculations mentally without the copy. He disclaims any credit for ability in his work, further than a little stick-to-it-iveness.

Mr. Lytle's book will never figure among the best sellers, nor will he coin money with it. Only one copy will probably be sold in any municipality and possibly not that many in some of the smaller communities.

Nuns' Sacrifice.

Three nuns have just left Montreal to spend the remainder of their lives in the leper colony at Sheeklung Island, near Canton. All three are only a little more than twenty years of age. For a time, at all events, they will be the only nuns to care and tend for four hundred Chinese women suffering from the awful disease of leprosy, and a separate hospital has been erected for them by Father Conrardy and his few assistants.

King's Beer as a Prize.

Mr. Tom Wright, the heaviest inhabitant of Derby, ran a 50 yards' race at Burton-on-Trent with Mr. George Fairburn, an elderly Burton man, the prize being a bottle of the famous ale brewed by King Edward. Mr. Wright fell, his opponent winning easily.

A NORTHERN PRELATE.

Bishop Reeve Knows the Wild as Few Men Do.

The largest diocese in the world is that of Bishop Reeve of Mackenzie River. One scarcely realizes the immensity of Canada's hinterland until he has heard of it from one who, like Bishop Reeve, has spent his life beyond the outposts of civilization. Recently in a lecture in Toronto his lordship told something of his life in the north. He has a "diocese" of half a million square miles, while another 300,000 square miles were also in his charge. "Standing at my door-step (if we had a step, of which I am not certain), it was 2,000 miles by trail to my farthest station," said Bishop Reeve, "almost as far as from here to the Pacific coast. We had to hunt for almost all our food, and in those days it took three months to reach my post at Fort Simpson."

Bishop Reeve showed some most interesting slides of tar sand-banks on the Athabasca River, where coal-oil is surely to be found, and will one day prove most valuable, and where natural gas is extremely abundant, and gushes out in jets in places, which if lighted, flares to a height of 15 or 20 feet.

"Part of the territory is semi-Arctic," said Bishop Reeve, "with coarse grasses, a few willows, and nothing else. On the Arctic coast all is dreary desolation. The only wood they find stranded on the river banks, having floated down. Strange to say, wild flowers grow in some profusion on Arctic shores, and no less than 150 different varieties were discovered by a man in that region, who made a hobby of searching for them.

"I have seen mountains of ice formed," said the bishop, "by the water pushing the ice away to the banks, sometimes throwing up great ice boulders over on top of the other, making it look like a miniature Rocky Mountains. Once the water rose 50 feet, owing to an ice jam, and everyone became extremely fearful."

The bishop spoke of some half-breed Crees at Fort Chippewin, on Athabasca Lake, who, although English, was a foreign tongue to them, could repeat two gospels, two collects, two epistles, and two hymns perfectly in Sunday school. "I have asked many civilized children if they could do this," the bishop declared, "and have never yet been answered in the affirmative."

After being nearly burned to death with his wife, Bishop Reeve lived for years in a shack, 11 feet square, building for his successor a wooden house which it took three years to complete.

Slides were shown of Indians and Esquimaux carrying their babies on their backs in moss bags, covered with a shawl. "The children were dirty little things when they came out of the woods," said the bishop.

"The Esquimaux girls," continued Bishop Reeve, "were, many of them, quite pretty and rosy-cheeked, like the daughter of an Ontario farmer. Their great endeavor was to wear as much hair as possible, and the older the lady, the more hair she had, for she would steal her husband's and mix it with her own, and even make her 'bun' appear larger by padding it with mud. It was combed perhaps twice a year."

"To speak of the newly discovered Esquimaux as blonde is a misnomer. I was talking to Mr. Stefansson, and he told me that very few indeed were really fair.

"Fish was the staple food in many places, and for two years on end I lived on nothing but fish and potatoes three times a day. The fish was often rotten and once we lived on rotten fish for four days. Bear also is a favorite food where it can be obtained, when the bear is not over four years old, and wild-cat also."

Great Expectations.

Call these two lake sailors Mutt and Jeff; just to be familiar. It was down the St. Lawrence in the vicinity of Prescott, where the decks of the river saloons are usually full of sailors, no matter what happens to the ships. The weather was hot. The master of a boat sailing from Rutland, Vt., to Chicago, desired to ship a couple of sailors. So he went into a river saloon, where he found as capable a pair of sealegs as ever rolled home at two a.m. with a sidewalk for a deck. They were laying in a cargo of refreshments, not knowing the minute some shipmaster would wander in.

"Hoy, you fellows—I want a couple of sailors. Ready to ship?"

Each looked at his glass and heaved anchor with a sigh.

"Yep, pardner, I guess we be," said one. "Where does she run to?"

"Chicago."

"Oh—oh! Good town for beer. But, say, it's a long run to Chicago."

"Yum, and dang hot weather," said the other.

"Say, cap'n—there's on'y one question I'd like t' ask 'bout that boat. Seein' as the weather's hot an' it's a long run to where the beer flows free—has that boat got any shade trees on 'er?"

The Peace River Rush.

Several hundred thousand tons of provisions and supplies, including mining, drilling and sawmill outfits, have been shipped from Edmonton to the outposts of civilization during the last 90 days, and much more equipment will go forward by river scows and pack trains before the close of the season. Seventeen parties are prospecting in the Canadian Rockies, west of Edmonton, but most of the work at present is being carried on in the north country.

William Gordon, a pioneer of the Fort McMurray district, said in Edmonton recently that prominent financial houses are backing several of the prospecting parties.

More Cigarettes.

Figures compiled by the Department of Inland Revenue at Ottawa show that the people of Canada last year smoked 975,325,501 cigarettes, an increase of nearly 200,000,000 over the figures for 1911.

COSTLY KISSES.

A War, a Race Riot and a Regiment of Soldiers Among the Results.

In the year 1794, the beautiful, charming and famous Duchess of Gordon founded and raised the Gordon Highlanders, one of the most famous regiments of Scotch Highlanders.

The most attractive terms to a new recruit in this gallant regiment were a guinea in gold and a kiss from the fair-famed duchess. It is said that this famous regiment of soldiers was raised more quickly than any other regiment in the British service. This seems all very good, yet the Gordon Highlanders paid dearly for the kiss they had received from the charming Duchess of Gordon. They were soon sent to fight the French and in their first engagement 300 of them fell, killed and wounded. The survivors of the Gordon Highlanders always maintained that they never regretted the price they paid for a single kiss.

In the year 1703 a stolen kiss was the means of bringing about a bloody and expensive ware. Ferdinand of Bavaria was journeying into a neighboring state. One day during his journey he visited the royal household of a neighbor and while wandering wandering around in the spacious park that surrounded the palace he espied a beautiful maiden under a wide-spreading tree close at hand. He was so bewitched with her beauty and charming personality that he impulsively and thoughtlessly implanted a kiss on her fair and lovely cheek.

She was a princess of the royal family, but the Bavarian prince did not know it, neither did he know that she was an affianced bride and that the bridegroom-elect was near by and saw the whole affair. There were hot words and blows. A duel was fought and both principals were almost fatally wounded. Diplomatic relations between the two petty kingdoms were suspended and a long and bloody war ensued. The stolen kiss was paid for most dearly in blood and treasure.

It is considerably within a decade that a negro kissed a white waitress in a restaurant in a little town called Granger, near Salt Lake City, Utah. The lookers-on were indignant and very soon there was a mob and a race war ensued. Thirty-six white men were killed and wounded and over 80 negroes met the same fate.

The strangest and most peculiar climax in this bloody affair was the fact that the same negro and white waitress that had been the cause of the bloodshed and riot were married and then the negresses of the town joined issue with the white men and started in pursuit of the negro and his white bride and they barely escaped death at the hands of the angry black and white mob by sudden and swift flight.

Swinburne's Hatred of Tobacco.

Tennyson was the smoking poet of the Victorian era, says the London Chronicle. His two great contemporaries—Browning and Swinburne—hated tobacco, especially Swinburne. He expressed himself with characteristic vehemence. He had wandered into the Arts Club, where he sought and in vain, a room that was free from the fumes of tobacco smoke. At length his fury overcame him. "James I," he exclaimed, "was a knave, a tyrant, a fool, a liar, a coward, but I love him, I worship him, because he slit the throat of that filthy blackguard, Raleigh, who invented this filthy smoking!"

Veteran Peer Dead.

The veteran Irish peer, Viscount Charlemont, died at Drumcairne, County Tyrone, a few days ago. He was eighty-four years old. As Captain Caulfield he served with distinction in the Crimean War. From 1868 to 1895 he was Comptroller of the Household to successive Irish Viceroys. In 1892 he succeeded to the Irish Viscounty of his cousin, the last Earl of Charlemont. He had no seat in the House of Lords. He is succeeded in Viscounty by his nephew, Mr. James Edward Caulfield. The Countess of Ranfurly is the late peer's daughter.

St. James Was Hospital.

St. James' Palace was originally a hospital dedicated to St. James, and was adopted as a Royal residence by Henry VIII., who built the clock-tower and gateway from designs by Holbein. Charles I. slept at St. James' Palace the night before his execution, and walked across St. James' Park to Whitehall next morning. The British Court is officially known as the Court of St. James, though the Palace is no longer used as a residence of the Sovereign.

Free Pass.

The tenant of Huntingdon farm, Swaston, England, is bound to grow three acres of peas every year for the inhabitants. When they are ready for picking the town crier announces the fact, and those who choose can pick what peas they like. The custom dates back 300 years, when a poor woman was imprisoned for stealing peas.

Ground Flat.

A young man from a country village when sightseeing in Edinburgh was greatly astonished on seeing "Mr. Smith, Hailor (ground flat)" inscribed on a door and after a careful study of the plate exclaimed:

"Great Scott, sic a death! Shairly he's been run ower wi' a steam roller!"—London Graphic.

House Owners.

At the London County Council recently it was stated that 38,000 persons own more than five acres of land, public authorities and railway companies own twenty-two square miles, and the Duke of Westminster owns three-quarters of a square mile.

Table Mountain Railway.

The Swiss engineer who has recently submitted plans for the construction of a railway up Cape Town's famous mountain, estimates that the funicular railway which he recommends will take two and a half years to construct.

Minister at 90.

Probably the oldest minister of the Gospel in the British Isles is the Rev. Evan Edwards, of Torquay, who is still hale and hearty, although in his ninety-ninth year. He was actively engaged in the pastorate until a few years ago, and still attends services.

Do your boots pinch?

If so, look out for a tiny corn. Cure it before it grows big. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is the best. Try "Putnam's."
