A visitor to Wolfville over the week end was that veteran journalist, Mr. C. C. Blackadder, of the Halifax Recorder. Mr. Blackadder made a pleasant call on The AcADIAN and was given a cordial welcome by the editor. Besides being the publisher of the oldest newspaper in the province he is probably Nova Scotia's oldest newspaper man still in harness. He is in love with his profession to the extent that some years ago he declined the honor of an appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of his native province. Old in point of years he maintains the same youthful and buoyant manner which has ever made him a popular member of the craft. Here's hoping for him continued health and energy.

A lawyer was always lecturing his office boy, whether he needed it or not. One day he chanced to hear the following conversation between the boy and one employed next door. "How much greated to lear the following conversation between the boy and one employed next door. "How much does he pay you?" asked the latter, a lawyer was always lecturing his office boy, whether he needed it or not.
